

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

US 15583, 50.35

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

US 15583, 50.35

HARVARD
COLLEGE LIBRARY

HISTORY OF TAMMANY HALL

By the Same Author.

A HISTORY OF PUBLIC FRANCHISES IN NEW YORK CITY (Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx).

No. 1, Vol IV, of MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.
Cloth, 50 Cents.

The first and only complete history of public franchises in New York.—New York Mail and Express.

The amount of well-digested material this issue contains is surprising.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Reform Club Committee on City Affairs has rendered a public service by publishing a history of franchises.—New York Journal of Commerce.

Extremely readable as well as extremely valuable.—Outlook.

PUBLISHED BY

Reform Club Committee on City Affairs, 52 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

James Ford Rhodes

THE HISTORY OF TAMMANY HALL

BY
GUSTAVUS MYERS

Author of "A History of Public Franchises in New York City"

NEW YORK
PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHOR
52 WILLIAM STREET
1901

LONDON:
P. S. KNOX & SON,

27, ABchurch Lane, E.C. 4.

US 15583, 50, 35
✓ C

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY RECEIVED THROUGH THE BUREAU FOR RESEARCH IN MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT
1938

COPYRIGHT, 1901,
BY
GUSTAVUS MYERS.

73614
62
53

PREFACE.

In most men's minds a certain spell of wonder attaches to the career and character of the Tammany Society and Tammany Hall. The long continuance of this dual power ; its control of the city, infrequently interrupted, throughout the century ; the nature of its principles, the method of its practices and the character of its personnel—all these combine to furnish a spectacle which exerts over the general mind a peculiar and strong fascination.

It was under the sway of this mood that I began the investigation which has resulted in this volume. I had no thought, on beginning, to carry the work so far : I sought merely to satisfy my curiosity regarding the more important particulars of Tammany's history. But I soon learned that what I sought was not easily to be obtained. The few narratives already published were generally found to be either extravagant panegyrics, printed under the patronage of the Tammany Society, or else partisan attacks, violent in style and untruthful in statement. Usually both were characterized by their paucity of real information no less than by the number of their palpable errors of fact.

Turning from these, I determined to find the facts for myself. My search led me first through the files of all the available newspapers from 1789 to the present time, and thence—for origins and contributory causes—through publications as far back as 1783 ; thence through State and city histories, and a great number of biographies, sketches, essays, political pamphlets and broadsides. The fragmentary matter gleaned from these sources was found to be extremely valuable in helping to form the continuous thread of a narrative, and in determining contemporary spirit; but the statements and conclusions, particularly with regard to the character and conduct of public men, were generally contradictory and inconclusive. Realizing this, I began the last phase of my search—a task that has led me through numberless dreary pages of the Minutes and Documents of the Common Council (which for the years previous to 1831 exist only in manuscript), Journals and Documents of the Senate and Assembly, including the reports of various legislative committees; Congressional and Executive Records, Treasury Reports, Records of the Police, Common Pleas, Superior and Supreme Courts; Minutes of the Oyer and Terminer; Grand Jury Presentments, and Records of the Board of Supervisors. Finally, I have had the good fortune, in developing the story of the middle and later periods, of having secured many valuable interviews with a number of men who actively participated in the stirring events of thirty, forty and even fifty years ago.

The purpose to write a book became fixed as my search progressed. The work is finished, and the result is now to be given to the public. What I have sought to produce is a narrative history—plain, compact and impartial. I have sought to avoid an indulgence, on the one hand, in political speculation, and on the other, in moralizing platitudes. Such deductions and generalizations as from time to time I have made, seem to me necessary in elucidating the narrative; without them the story would prove to the reader a mere chronology of unrelated facts.

If my narrative furnishes a sad story for the leaders and chieftains of the Tammany Society and the Tammany Hall political organization, the fault is not mine, but that of a multitude of incontestible public records. It was in no partisan spirit that I began the work, and in none that I now conclude it. I have always been an independent in politics; and I have even voted, when there seemed to me ample reason for doing so, a Tammany ticket. I have tried to set down nothing in malice, nor with such exceptions as are obviously necessary with regard to living men, to extenuate anything whatever. Those who may be tempted to consider my work partial and partisan, on account of the showing that it makes of Tammany corruption and inefficiency, will do well to read carefully the pages relating to the Whigs and to some other opponents of Tammany Hall.

The records show that nearly every prominent Tammany leader has been involved in some theft or swindle, public or private. These peculations or frauds range, in point of time, from 1799 and 1805-6 to the present day; in the matter of persons, from the founder of the Tammany Society to some of the most recent "bosses," and in gradation of amount, from the petty thousands taken by Mooney, Stagg and Page, in the first decade of the century, to the $1,220,000 taken by Swartwout in 1830-38, and the undetermined millions taken by Wood and Tweed in the fifties, sixties and first two years of the seventies. From nearly the beginning of its active political career, Tammany, with few and generally brief interruptions, has continued to abstract money from the city, the State and the nation—the interruptions to the practice generally coinciding with the periods when Tammany has been deprived of political power.

My search has shown me the absurdity of the pretense that any vital distinction exists between the Tammany Society and the Tammany Hall political organization. Tammany members industriously propagate this pretense, but it has neither a historic nor an actual basis. From 1805, the date of the apparent separation of the organization from the society, the Sachems of the latter have ruled the policies of the former. Repeatedly, as in 1828, 1838, 1853, and 1857, they have determined the “regularity” of contending factions in the organization, and have shut the hall to members of the faction against which they have decided. The Sachems have at all times been the leaders in the political body, and the control of the society in every year that Tammany has held control of the city, has determined the division of plunder for the ensuing year. The Tammany Society and the Tammany political organization constitute a dual power—but, unlike Ormuzd and Ahrimanes, a duality working by identical means for an identical end.

The records show that Tammany has been, from the beginning, an evil force in politics. Its characteristics were formed by its first great leader, Aaron Burr, and his chief lieutenant, Matthew L. Davis; and whatever is distinctive of Tammany methods and policies in 1900 is, for the most part, but the development of features initiated by these two men one hundred years ago. It is curious to recall, on looking back to the time when my researches began, the abundant evidences of misapprehension regarding Tammany's earlier history. "No especial discredit attached to Tammany Hall before Tweed's time," wrote in effect, Mr. E. L. Godkin in an essay published a few years ago. State Senator Fassett, in 1890, made a similar statement in his report on the investigation of conditions in New York City. "Down to the time," he says, "that the Tammany 'ring,' under the leadership of William M. Tweed, took possession of the government of New York City * * * the office [of Alderman] was held in credit and esteem." The exact reverse of both statements is true; and abundant proof of my contention, I believe, will be found in the pages of this book. Another instance may be given—though the opinion expressed, instead of being founded upon misapprehension, may charitably be set down as one of misjudgment. "I was a Sachem of Tammany," said a one-time noted politician recently, before the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, "in the days when it was an honor to be a Sachem." The precise time he did not specify; and it would be difficult to identify it from the description he has given. Certainly, since 1805, the office of Sachem has been one ill calculated, of itself, to bring particular honor to the incumbent.

It would be dishonest to pretend for a moment that Tammany has been alone in its evil-doing; it has been simply the most ingenious and the most pretentious; and its practices have a historic continuity and persistence not shared by any of its rivals. The Whigs, for instance, sought in every possible way to outdo Tammany in election frauds; they stuffed ballot boxes, colonized voters, employed rowdies and thugs at the polls and distributed thousands of deceptive ballots for the use of their opponents. In fiscal frauds, likewise, they left a record well-nigh equalling that of Tammany. The Native Americans imitated both Whigs and Tammany men, and the Republicans have given instances at Albany of a wholesale venality unapproached in the history of legislative bodies. Among the few exceptions, during the earlier half of the century, to the general prostitution of civic ideals, was the career of the Workingmen's party (1829-31) and of its successor, the Equal Rights party (1834-38). The principles of both these parties were far in advance of their time; and though the effect tended somewhat to the temporary heightening of political standards, a reaction followed, which again brought in a long period of fraud and corruption.

But shameful as this record is, it is one which, viewed in the light of present practices and present ideals, gives the basis for a robust faith in the future. The hiding of vice and the employment of indirect methods in cheating and plundering, are themselves an evidence of the existence of moral standards; and it is unquestionable that Tammany to-day outwardly conforms to ethical demands which would have been scoffed at a half century ago. No one can read the details of political history without acknowledging a growing betterment in political methods. "Hardly a man [before the Civil War] could be found," says Jesse Macy in his recent "History of Political Parties in the United States," "who felt himself too virtuous to go into politics. The sensitively moral were not repelled by political methods which to-day are regarded as disgraceful." And further along he says: "It is easy to forget that, from the very nature of moral progress, it often happens that intelligent moral leaders of one generation will in all good conscience say and do things which only the conscious hypocrite or the knave of a later generation can do." Pessimism as to political progress secures no support from real research.

It may be asked, and with some show of reason, how it has been possible for New York City to achieve its present rank in population, in wealth, in commerce and in transportation facilities; how it has acquired its splendid libraries, its magnificent buildings, its museums, its parks, its benevolent institutions, in the face of this continued dominancy of corruption, violence and fraud. The answer is simple: the city has grown despite these adverse influences. The harbor of New York is one factor; the Erie Canal (constructed notwithstanding the opposition of the dominant political party of the city) is another; the tremendous growth of the nation, and the thousand external influences that determined the location of the nation's metropolis, are yet other factors. The city has grown to magnificence and world-wide influence; but it has paid dear tribute for every forward step it has taken. Imagination fails at picturing the metropolis that might have been, could the city throughout the century have been guided and controlled in the light of present-day civic ideals.

The difficulties of securing the publication of this work by any of the regular publishing houses proved insurmountable. Two of the best-known firms wrote that they could not encourage me to submit the manuscript to them for consideration. Four others considered its publication "inadvisable," though their readers had returned favorable recommendations. One other declined it without giving reasons. More recently, when the offer of certain responsible persons who had read the manuscript, to guarantee the expense of its publication, was made to a certain house, the firm replied: "* * * we should hardly feel warranted in locking horns with Tammany Hall * * *." It was thought that perhaps an out-of-town house might issue it, but here again declinations were forthcoming. Finally it was decided to attempt its publication by private subscription. To this end I solicited individual advances to a publication fund, from a number of the city's public-spirited citizens. The appearance of the work at this time is due to the kindly interest of these men.

Acknowledgments for the courtesies tendered me, and for material aid rendered in the project of issuing the work, are due to a number of persons: To the public-spirited citizens of different political faiths, who, while familiar with the scope of the work, contributed the funds for its publication without insisting upon a censorship of the manuscript or its alteration in any way for political purposes; and particularly to Mr. James B. Reynolds, Mr. James W. Pryor and Milo R. Maltbie, Ph.D.

GUSTAVUS MYERS.

NEW YORK CITY, January, 1901.

ERRATA AND COMMENT.

Page 17, Note 2.—The first one-day election held in the city was that of April 14, 1840. For the rest of the State, however, the change from three-day elections was not made until several years later.

Page 21, Line 2.—For 1808 read 1809.

Page 29, Last line, and page 30, first line.—Though the present laws of the Tammany Society forbid the successive re-election of a Grand Sachem, the incumbent of the office is frequently permitted to "hold over."

Page 35, Line 9.—For Mayorlity read Mayoralty.

Page 50, Line 15.—For Senator read Senators.

Page 70, Last note.—For At the same time read By the Constitutional Amendments.

Page 109, Last line.—For a $1,000,000 read $1,000,000.

Page 150, Line 15.—For attorneys read witnesses.

Page 174, Line 16.—For O'Connor read O'Conor.

Page 178, Line 1.—For under a new law read under a new charter.

Page 208, Lines 4 and 5.—For 40,000 read 10,000.

Page 212, Line 13.—For voters read persons.

Page 213, Line 2, and page 215, line 11.—For Breckinridge read Breckenridge.

Page 233, Note 1, first line.—For XXIX read XXVII.

Page 240, Line 4.—For allegience read allegiance.

Page 243, Note 2, last line.—For XXXIV read XXIX.

Page 246, Foot of page.—For George W. Purser read George H. Purser.

Page 248, Lines 20 and 21.—The d in the word nominated and the terminal e in the word considerable have dropped out of the type-form.

Page 284, Line 11.—For O'Brien read Mr. O'Brien. (In the later chapters the conventional title of Mr. is used—except when the Christian name is given—in the mention of living men.)

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

	PAGE
RESISTANCE TO ARISTOCRACY—1789-1798.	1

Contributory Causes—Indian Titles and Ceremonials
—Tammany Conciliates the Creeks—Early Celebrations—Sympathy with the French Revolution—Extinction Narrowly Averted.

CHAPTER II.

AARON BURR AT THE HELM—1798-1802.	18
---	----

Burr the First Leader—Tammany's Initial Campaign—Local Triumph Secured.

CHAPTER III.

TAMMANY QUARRELS WITH DE WITT CLINTON—1802-1809.	20
--	----

Burr's Downfall—Political Organization Begun—
A Display of Patriotism—The First Disclosures—Tammany Enforces Discipline—Clinton Again Suggests Compromise.

CHAPTER IV.

SLOW RECOVERY FROM DISASTER—1809-1815.	35
--	----

Tammany and the Aliens—The Society Erects a Wigwam—Clinton's Ambition—Tammany's Support of the War of 1812—Indian Customs Abandoned—Changes in the Organization.

CHAPTER V.

	PAGE
TAMMANY IN ABSOLUTE CONTROL—1815-1817. - - -	44

The Council Removes Clinton—The Erie Canal Project—The Wigwam Makes Further Gains—Tammany Diplomacy—The Power of "Regularity"—Clinton Nominated for Governor—Irish Invade the Wigwam—Clinton Elected.

CHAPTER VI.

CLINTON MAINTAINS HIS SUPREMACY—1817-1820. - - -	57
--	----

Legislative Favoritism to a Sachem—Tammany Corruption—More Disclosures—The Wigwam Banquets Jackson—Salaries of Clintonites Reduced—Clinton Again Defeats Tammany.

CHAPTER VII.

THE SUFFRAGE CONTEST—1820-1822. - - -	67
---------------------------------------	----

Tammany Forced to Join the Movement—The Wealthy Classes Oppose It—The Victory.

CHAPTER VIII.

STRUGGLES OF THE PRESIDENTIAL FACTIONS—1822-1825. -	71
---	----

Two "Regular" Tickets—Adams and Jackson Factions Fight—Calhoun Men Elect Grand Sachem—Wigwam Again Strikes at Clinton—Tammany Hall as a Federal Court Room—Tactics of the Campaign—Clinton and Jackson Win—Contrast Between Clinton and the Sachems.

CHAPTER IX.

THE JACKSON ELEMENT VICTORIOUS—1825-1828. - - -	82
---	----

More Disclosures—Van Buren Turns the Tide—Jackson Faction Wins—Sachems Shut Out Adams Men—Large Majority for Jackson Electors.

CONTENTS.

xvii

CHAPTER X.

	PAGE
THE WORKINGMEN'S PARTY—1829-1830.	91

Its Principles—Denounced by the Wigwam—Tammany Fathers a Mechanics' Lien Law—Tammany Mayor Elected by Fraud—Workingmen's
Second Campaign—Subsidence of the Workingmen's Movement.

CHAPTER XI.

TAMMANY AND THE BANK CONTEST—1831-1834.	100
--	------------

The Wigwam Wins for Jackson—An Imposing Banquet—Another Local Triumph—Playing Double on the Bank Issue—Presidential Campaign of 1832—Aldermanic Report on Election Frauds—First Mayoralty Election by the People.

CHAPTER XII.

THE EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY—1834-1837.	111
--	------------

Attempt to Restore Imprisonment for Debt—The Charter Scandals—Fraudulent Paper Currency—
"Jobs" in the Council—New Ferries Withheld—Bryant Supports the New Movement—Clash of the Factions—Equal Rights Men Secede—Corruption Continues—Workingmen and the Law—Deadlock in the Council—Anti-Tammany Resolutions—Campaign of 1836—Sufferings of the Poor—Equal Rights Leaders Arrested—Tammany Defeated.

CHAPTER XIII.

TAMMANY "PURIFIED"—1837-1838.	132
--	------------

State Bank Men Overpowered—Fusion with Equal Rights Men—Sachems Shut Out Both Factions—
Anti-Bank Men Control.

CHAPTER XIV.

	PAGE
WHIG FAILURE RESTORES TAMMANY TO POWER—1838-1840. - - - - -	138
Whig Election Frauds—Tammany Deplores Whig Corruption—Tammany Elects Varian—Contest Over the Registration Bill—Death of William Leggett—More Disclosures.

CHAPTER XV.

RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE "GANGS"—1840-1846. - - -	151
Tammany and the Aliens—The Wigwam Wins for Van Buren—The Originator of the "Gang"—Turbulence of the City—More Disclosures—Morris Elected for the Third Time—Combination Against Tammany—The New Administration a Disappointment—Rynders and His Empire Club—Tammany Wins for Polk—Tammany Returned to Power.

CHAPTER XVI.

"BARNBURNERS" AND "HUNKERS"—1846-1850. - - -	166
Whigs Triumph Again—Havemeyer Again Elected—Campaign of 1848—Whigs Elect Woodhull Mayor—The Factions Unite for State Campaign—Factional Fight Reopens—Contest at the Society's Election—Sachems Again Shut Out Both Factions—Another Fusion Arranged.

CHAPTER XVII.

DEFEAT AND VICTORY—1850-1852. - - - - -	179
Early Career of Wood—Wood Defeated—The Society Again Invokes Patriotism—Sales of Nominations—The General Craze for Wealth—The "Forty Thieves" Council—Attitude of the Workingmen—Campaign of 1852—Rows at the Primaries—Tammany in Full Control.

CONTENTS.

xix

CHAPTER XVIII.

	PAGE
"HARDSHELLS" AND "SOFTSHELLS"—1852-1853. -	191

Quarrel Over Possession of the Hall—Protest Against Sachems' Action—The Sachems' Reply—
The "Softshells" Win.

CHAPTER XIX.

A CHAPTER OF DISCLOSURES—1853-1854. -	199
---------------------------------------	-----

How the Ferry Leases Were Secured—Extortions of Various Sorts—Reform Party Secures New Charter
—Reform Party Carries the New Council.

CHAPTER XX.

FERNANDO WOOD'S FIRST ADMINISTRATION—1854-1856. -	207
---	-----

A Favorable Beginning—The Real Wood Appears—
Wood Renominated—Another Tammany Candidate—Dominance of the Saloon—Five Candidates in the Field—Wood Again Successful.

CHAPTER XXI.

WOOD'S SECOND ADMINISTRATION—1856-1859. -	216
---	-----

Character of the Judiciary—New Charter Changes
Election Time—Another Quarrel Over the Hall—
Two Police Forces—Various Activities of Wood—Tiemann Elected Mayor—Wood Undismayed by Defeat—Wood Driven from the Organization—Anti-Tammany Council Elected—Supervisors and the Election Boards—Wood Again Elected Mayor.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE CIVIL WAR AND AFTER—1859-1867. -	232
--------------------------------------	-----

Fowler's Downfall—Frauds Against Lincoln Electors—Attitude on the War—A Reign of Corruption—
The Legislature Vies with the Council—Tammany and Mozart Agree on Fusion—Citizens' Movement

Successful—Campaign of 1862—Hackett's Opinion of Wood—Another Reform Mayor Elected—The Wigwam and McClellan—Wigwam Mayoralty Candidate Withdrawn—Hoffman's Administration and Re-Election—Preponderance of Alien Voters—Rise of the "Boss."

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE TWEED "RING"—1867-1870. - - - - - 252

The First "Boss"—Fourteenth Street Wigwam Built—Tammany's Victory for Seymour and Hoffman—Hall Elected Mayor—Traffic in Nominations—Corruption of the Judiciary—Tweed in the State Senate—Corruption at Albany—Operations on a Larger Scale—Hall Re-Elected Mayor—Affluence of the Ring.

CHAPTER XXIV.

TWEED IN HIS GLORY—1870-1871. - - - - - 269

Young Democracy's Plan—Tweed's Charter Passed—The "Boss's" Meridian of Power—Colossal Growth of Frauds—Another Citizens' Movement—Tweed and the Poor—The Viaduct Railroad Scheme—A Close Pinch in the Legislature—Subserviency of Press and Public—A Statue to Tweed Suggested—In the Full Glow of Splendor.

CHAPTER XXV.

COLLAPSE AND DISPERSION OF THE "RING"—1871-1872. 283

Revelations by the Times—Indifference of the "Ring"—Committee of Seventy Formed—Burning of the Controller's Vouchers—Sub-Committee's Report—Hall and Tweed Indicted—Appeal to the Voters—The Seventy Victorious—End of the "Ring"—Escape and Recapture—Tweed Dies in Prison—Fate of the Other Conspirators—Amount and Disposition of the Plunder.

CONTENTS.

xxi

CHAPTER XXVI.

	PAGE
TAMMANY RISES FROM THE ASHES—1872-1874. - -	299

Rise of John Kelly—Reformers Chosen Sachems—Havemeyer Elected Mayor—His Good Record—The Wigwam Again Victorious—Back to Its Old Self.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF JOHN KELLY—1874-1886. - -	309
---	-----

Kelly's Rule Supreme—He Bolts the State Ticket—Grace Elected Mayor—County Democracy Organized—Tammany "Irregular"—Three Democratic Factions—The "Boodle" Aldermen—Death of Kelly.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF RICHARD CROKER—1886-1897. -	319
---	-----

Mr. Croker's Early Career—Municipal Campaign of 1886—Wigwam Rejects Mayor Hewitt—The Flack Case—Disclosures of 1890—Citizens' Movement of 1890—Tammany's Great Victory of 1892—Election
Frauds of 1893—The Lexow Disclosures—Tammany Overthrown—The Reform Administration—Mr.
Croker as "Boss"—The Election of 1897.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF RICHARD CROKER (Concluded)— 1897-1901. - - - - -	339
--	-----

"Wise, Honest and Economical"—The Mazet Inquiry—Ice Trust and Ramapo—Mr. Croker and the City—No Reform Effected—Present Character of the Organization.

CHAPTER I.

RESISTANCE TO ARISTOCRACY.

1789-1798.

The Society of St. Tammany, or Columbian Order, was founded on May 12, 1789, a fortnight later than the establishment of the National Government, by William Mooney.¹ "His object," says Judah Hammond,² an early member of Tammany, "was to fill the country with institutions designed, and men determined, to preserve the just balance of power. His purpose was patriotic and purely republican. The constitution provided by his care contained, among other things, a solemn asseveration, which every member at his initiation was required to repeat and subscribe to, that he would sustain the State institutions and resist a consolidation of power in the general Government."

Contributory Causes.

Before the Revolution, societies variously known as the "Sons of Liberty" and the "Sons of St. Tammany" had been formed to aid the cause of independence. Tammany, or Tamanend, was an Indian chief, of whom fanciful legends have been woven, but of whose real life little can be told. Some maintain that he lived in the neighborhood of Scranton, Pa., when William Penn arrived, and that he was present at the great council under the elm tree. His name is said to have been on Penn's first treaty with the Indians, April 23, 1683. He is also described as a great chief of the Delaware nation, and his wigwam is said to have stood on the grounds now occupied by Princeton University. The fame of his wisdom, benevolence and love of liberty spreading to the colonists, they adopted his name for their patriotic lodges. When societies sprang up bearing the names of St. George, St. Andrew or St. David and proclaiming their fealty to King George, the Separatists dubbed Tammany a saint in ridicule of the imported saints. The Revolution over, the "Sons of Liberty" and the "Sons of St. Tammany" dissolved.

¹ Mooney was an ex-soldier, who at this time kept a small upholstery shop at 23 Nassau street. He was charged with having deserted the American Army, September 16, 1776, and with joining the British forces in New York, where for a year he wore the King's uniform. The truth or falsity of this charge cannot be ascertained.

² Hammond, "Political History of the State of New York," I: 341.

The controversy over the adoption of the Federal constitution had the effect of re-uniting the patriotic lodges. The rich and influential classes favored Hamilton's design of a republic having a President and a Senate chosen for life, and State governments elected by Congress. Opposed to this attempt toward a highly centralized government were the forces which afterward organized the Anti-Federalist party. Their leader in New York was Governor George Clinton. The greater number of the old members of the Liberty and Tammany societies, now familiarly known as "Liberty boys," belonged to this opposition.

During this agitation Hamilton managed to strengthen his party, by causing to be removed, in 1787, the political disabilities bearing upon the Tories. New York was noted for its Tories, more numerous in proportion than in any other colony, since here, under the Crown, offices were dispensed more liberally than elsewhere. In the heat of the Revolutionary War and the times immediately following it, popular indignation struck at them in severe laws. In all places held by the patriot army a Tory refusing to renounce his allegiance to King George ran considerable danger not only of mob visit, but of confiscation of property, exile, imprisonment, or, in flagrant cases of adherence to the enemy, death. From 1783 to 1787 the "Liberty boys" of the Revolution, who formed the bulk of the middle and working classes, governed New York City politics. In freeing the Tories from oppressive laws, and opening political life to them, Hamilton at once secured the support of a propertied class (for many of them had succeeded in retaining their estates) numerous enough to form a balance of power and to enable him to wrest the control of the city from the "Liberty boys."

The elevation to office of many of the hated, aristocratic supporters of Great Britain inflamed the minds of the "Liberty boys" and their followers, and made the chasm between the classes, already wide, yet wider. The bitterest feeling cropped out. Hamilton, put upon the defensive, took pains in his addresses to assure the people of the baselessness of the accusation that he aimed to keep the rich families in power. That result, however, had been partially assured by the State constitution of 1777. Gauging sound citizenship by the ownership of property, the draughtsmen of that instrument allowed only actual residents having freeholds to the value of £100, free of all debts, to vote for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor and State Senators, while a vote for the humbler office of Assemblyman was given only to those having freeholds of £20 in the county or paying forty shillings rent yearly. Poor soldiers who had nobly sustained the Revolutionary cause were justly embittered at being disqualified by reason of their poverty, while full political power was given to the property-owning Tories.

"The inequality," wrote one who lived in those days, "was greatly added to by the social and business customs of the times. * * * There was an aristocracy and a democracy whose limits were as clearly marked by manner and dress as by legal enactment. * * * The aristocracy controlled capital in trade, monopolized banks and banking privileges, which they did not hesitate to employ as a means of perpetuating their power."

Dr. John W. Francis tells, in his "Reminiscences," of the prevalence in New York for years after the Revolution of a supercilious class that missed no opportunity of sneering at the demand for political equality made by the leather-breeched mechanic with his few shillings a day.

Permeated with democratic doctrines, the populace detested the landed class. The founding of the Society of the Cincinnati was an additional irritant. Formed by the officers of the Continental army before disbandment, this society adopted one clause especially obnoxious to the radicals. It provided that the eldest male descendant of an original member should be entitled to wear the insignia of the order and enjoy the privileges of the society, which, it was argued, would be best perpetuated in that way. Jefferson saw a danger to the liberties of the people in this provision, since it would tend to give rise to a race of hereditary nobles, founded on the military, and breeding in turn other subordinate orders. At Washington's suggestion the clause was modified, but an ugly feeling rankled in the public mind, due to the existence of an active party supposedly bent on the establishment of a disguised form of monarchy.

It was at such a juncture of movements and tendencies that the Society of St. Tammany or Columbian Order was formed. The new organization constituted a formal protest against aristocratic influences, and stood for the widest democratization in political life.

Indian Titles and Ceremonials.

As a contrast to the old-world distinctions of the Cincinnati and other societies, the Tammany Society adopted aboriginal forms and usages. The officers held Indian titles. The head, or president, chosen from thirteen Sachems, corresponding to trustees, elected annually, was styled Grand Sachem. In its early years the society had a custom, now obsolete, of conferring the honorary office of Kitchi Okemaw, or Great Grand Sachem, upon the President of the United States. Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams and Jackson were hailed successively as the Great Grand Sachems of Tammany. After the Sachems came the Sagamore, or Master of Ceremonies, a Scribe, or secretary, and a Wiskinskie,¹ or doorkeeper. Instead of using the ordinary calendar designations, the society divided the year into seasons and these into moons. Its notices bore reckoning from the year

¹ So spelled in all the earlier records. Later, the s in the penultimate syllable came to be dropped.

Columbus discovered America, that of the Declaration of American Independence and of its own organization. Instead of inscribing: "New York, July, 1800," there would appear: "Manhattan, Season of Fruits, Seventh Moon, Year of Discovery three hundred and eighth; of Independence twenty-fourth, and of the Institution the twelfth." In early times the society was divided into tribes, one for each of the thirteen original States; there were the Eagle, Otter, Panther, Beaver, Bear, Tortoise, Rattlesnake, Tiger, Fox, Deer, Buffalo, Raccoon and Wolf tribes, which stood respectively for New York, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. A new member of the Tammany Society had the choice of saying to which of these tribes he cared to be attached. Frequently the members dressed in Indian garb and carried papooses in their public parades. They introduced the distinction between "long talks" and "short talks" in their public addresses. The name "Wigwam" was given to their meeting-place, and Barden's Tavern was selected as their first home.

At the initiation of the Grand Sachem a song beginning, "Brothers, Our Council Fire Shines Bright, et-hoh!" was sung, and at the initiation of a member another song was sung, beginning:

"Sacred's the ground where Freedom's found,
And Virtue stamps her Name."

The society contemplated founding a chain of Tammany societies over the country, and accordingly designated itself as Tammany Society, No. 1. A number sprang into life, but only a few—those in Philadelphia, Providence, Brooklyn and Lexington, Ky., continued for any time, and even these disappeared about the year 1818 or a few years later.

Tammany Conciliates the Creeks.

The society showed its Indian ceremonies to advantage and gained much prestige by aiding in the conciliation of the Creek Indians. After useless attempts to make a treaty with them, the Government undertook, as a last resort, in February, 1790, to influence Alexander McGillivray, their half-breed chief, to visit New York, where he might be induced to sign a treaty. To Col. Marinus Willett, a brave soldier of the Revolution, and later Mayor of New York City, the mission was intrusted. In July, 1790, Willett started North accompanied by McGillivray and twenty-eight Creek chiefs and warriors. Upon their arrival in New York, then the seat of the National Government, the members of the Tammany Society, in full Indian costume, welcomed them. One phase of the tale has it that the Creeks set up a wild whoop, at whose terrifying sound the Tammany make-believe red-faces fled in dismay. Another version tells that the Tammany Society and the military escorted the Indians to Secretary Knox's house, introduced them to Washington and then led them to the Wigwam at Barden's Tavern, where seductive drink was served. On August 2 the Creeks were entertained at a Tammany banquet. A treaty was signed on August 13.

In June of the same year Tammany had established, in the old City Hall, a museum "for the preservation of Indian relics." For a brief while the society devoted itself with assiduity to this department, but the practical men grew tired of it. On June 25, 1795, the museum was given over to Gardiner Baker, its curator, on condition that it was to be known for all time as the Tammany Museum and that each member of the society and his family were to have entrance free. Baker dying, the museum eventually passed into the hands of a professional museum-owner.

Early Celebrations.

Tammany's chief functions at first seem to have been the celebration of its anniversary day, May 12; the Fourth of July and Evacuation Day. The society's parades were events in old New York. On May 12, 1789, the day of organization, two marquees were built two miles above the city, whither the Tammany brethren went to hold their banquet. Thirteen discharges of cannon followed each toast. The first one read: "May Honor, Virtue and Patriotism ever be the distinguishing characteristics of the sons of St. Tammany." John Pintard¹, Tammany's first Sagamore, wrote an account² of the society's celebration of May 12, 1791. "The day," he says,

"was ushered in by a Federal salute from the battery and welcomed by a discharge of 13 guns from the brig Grand Sachem, lying in the stream. The society assembled at the great Wigwam, in Broad street, five hours after the rising of the sun, and was conducted from there in an elegant procession to the brick meeting house in Beekman street. Before them was borne the cap of Liberty ; after following seven hunters in Tammanial dress, then the great standard of the society, in the rear of which was the Grand Sachem and other officers. On either side of these were formed the members in tribes, each headed by its standard bearers and Sachem in full dress. At the brick meeting house an oration was delivered by their brother, Josiah Ogden Hoffman, to the society and to a most respectable and crowded audience. In the most brilliant and pathetic language he traced the origin of the Columbian Order and the Society of the Cincinnati. From the meeting house the procession proceeded (as before) to Campbell's grounds, where upwards of two hundred people partook of a handsome and plentiful repast. The dinner was honored by his Excellency [George Clinton] and many of the most respectable citizens."

¹ John Pintard was one of the founders of the New York Historical Society, the Academy of Design and other institutions. He was a very rich man at one time, but subsequently failed in business.

² Dunlap's American Daily Register, May 16, 1791.

The toasts, that now seem so quaint, mirror the spirit of the diners. "The Grand Sachem of the Thirteen United Fires," ran the first, "may his declining sun be precious in the sight of the Great Spirit that the mild luster of his departing beams may prove no less glorious than the effulgence of the rising or transcendent splendor of his meridian greatness." The second: "The head men and chiefs of the Grand Council of the Thirteen United Fires—may they convince our foes not only of their courage to lift, prudence to direct and clemency to withhold the hatchet, but of their power to inflict it in their country's cause."

Sympathy with the French Revolution.

Up to 1835, at least, toasts were an important feature in public dinners, as they were supposed to disclose the sentiments, political or otherwise, of the person or body from whom they came. In this fashion the Tammany Society announced its instant sympathy with the French Revolution in all its stages. On May 12, 1793, the sixth toast read : "Success to the Armies of France, and Wisdom, Concord and Firmness to the Convention." "The first sentence was hardly articulated," a newspaper¹ records, "when as one the whole company arose and gave three cheers, continued by roars of applause for several minutes; the toast was then given in whole and the applauses re-iterated."

At ten o'clock that morning, the same account relates, "the society had assembled at Tammanial Hall, in Broad street, and marched to St. Paul's Church, where Brother Cadwallader D. Colden delivered to a crowded and brilliant audience an animated talk on the excellence of the Government and situation of the United States when contrasted with those of despotic countries." In the procession were about 400 members in civilian dress. From each hat flowed a bucktail—the symbol of Liberty—and the standard and cap of Liberty were carried in front of the line. From the church "the Tammanials went to their Hall, where some 150 of them partook of an elegant dinner."

Public feeling ran high in discussing the French Revolution, and there were many personal collisions. The Tammany Society was in the vanguard of the American sympathizers and bore the brunt of abuse. The pamphlets and newspapers were filled with anonymous threats from both sides. "An Oneida Chief" writes in the New York Journal and Patriotic Register, June 8, 1793 :

"A Hint to the Whigs of New York : To hear our Brethren of France villified (with all that low Scurrility of which their enemies the English are so well stocked) in our streets and on the wharves ; nay, in our new and elegant Coffee House ; but more particularly in that den of ingrates, called Belvidere Club House, where at this very moment those enemies to liberty are swallowing potent draughts to the destruction and annihilation of Liberty, Equality and the Rights of Man, is not to be borne by freemen and I am fully of opinion that if some method is not adopted to suppress such daring and presumptuous insults, a band of determined Mohawks, Oneidas and Senekas will take upon themselves that necessary duty.'

¹ New York Journal and Patriotic Register, May 15, 1793.

There is no record of the carrying out of this threat.

Despite its original composition of men of both parties, the Tammany Society drifted year by year into being the principal upholder of the doctrines of which Jefferson was the chief exponent. Toward the end of Washington's administration political feelings developed into violent party divisions, and the Tammany Society became largely Anti-Federalist, or Republican, the Federalist members either withdrawing or being reduced to a harmless minority. It toasted the Republican leaders vociferously to show the world its sympathies and principles. On May 12, 1796, the glasses ascended to "Citizen" Thomas Jefferson, whose name was received with three cheers, and to "Citizen" Edward Livingston, for whom nine cheers were given. "The people," ran one toast, "may they ever at the risk of life and liberty support their equal rights in opposition to Ambition, Tyranny, to Sophistry and Deception, to Bribery and Corruption and to an enthusiastic fondness and implicit confidence in their fellow-fallible mortals."

Extinction Narrowly Averted.

Tammany had become, by 1796-97, a powerful and an extremely partisan body. But it came near being snuffed out of existence in the last year of Washington's presidency. Judah Hammond writes that when Washington, before the close of his second term,

"rebuked self-creative societies from an apprehension that their ultimate tendency would be hostile to the public tranquillity, the members of Tammany supposed their institution to be included in the reproof, and they almost all forsook it. The founder, William Mooney, and a few others continued steadfast. At one anniversary they were reduced so low that but three persons attended its festival.¹ From this time it became a political institution and took ground with Thomas Jefferson."

To such straits was driven the society which, a short time after, secured absolute control of New York City, and which has held that grasp, with but few and brief intermissions, ever since. The contrast between that sorry festival, with its trio of lonesome celebrators, and the Tammany Society of a few years afterwards presents one of the most striking pictures in American politics.

¹This statement of Hammond probably refers to May 12, 1797.

CHAPTER II.

AARON BURR AT THE HELM.

1798-1802.

The second period of the Tammany Society began about 1798. Relieved of its Federalist members, it became purely partisan. As yet it was not an "organization", in the modern political sense; it did not seek the enrollment and regimentation of voters. Its nature was more that of a private political club, which sought to influence elections by speeches, pamphlets and social means. It shifted its quarters from Barden's Tavern to the "Long Room," a place kept by a sometime Sachem, Abraham or "Brom" Martling,¹ at the corner of Nassau and Spruce streets. This Wigwam was a forlorn, one-story wooden building attached to Martling's Tavern, near, or partly overlapping, the spot where subsequently Tammany Hall erected its first building—the present Sun newspaper building. No larger than a good-sized room, the Wigwam was contemptuously styled by the Federalists "the Pig Pen." In that year New York City had only 58,000 inhabitants. The Wigwam stood on the very outskirts of the city. But it formed a social rendezvous very popular with the "Bucktails" of the time. Every night men gathered there to drink, smoke and "swap" stories. Fitz-Greene Halleck has written of a later time:

¹ Martling was several times elected a Sachem. Like most of the Republican politicians of the day he had a habit of settling his disputes in person. Taking offense, one day, at the remarks of one John Richard Huggins, a hair-dresser, he called at Huggins's shop, 104 Broadway, and administered to him a sound thrashing with a rope. When he grew old Tammany took care of him by appointing him to an obscure office (Keeper of the City Hall).

"There's a barrel of porter at Tammany Hall,
And the Bucktails are swigging it all the night long ;
In the time of my boyhood 'twas pleasant to call For a seat and cigar mid the jovial throng."

This social custom was begun early in the life of the society, and was maintained for several decades.

Burr the First Leader.

Aaron Burr was the first real leader of the Tammany Society. He was never Grand Sachem or even Sachem; it is doubtful whether he ever set foot in the Wigwam; it is known that it was never his habit to attend caucuses; but he controlled the society through his friends and protégés. The transition of Tammany from an effusive, speech-making society to an active political club was mainly through his instrumentality. Mooney¹ was a mediocre man, delighting in extravagant language and Indian ceremonials, and was merely a tool in the hands of far abler men. "Burr was our chief," said Matthew L. Davis, Burr's friend and biographer, and several times Grand Sachem of the society.

Davis's influence on the early career of Tammany was second only to that of Burr himself. He was reputed to be the originator of the time-honored modes of manufacturing public opinion, carrying primary meetings, obtaining the nomination of certain candidates, carrying a ward, a city, a county or even a State. During one period of his activity, it is related, meetings were held on different nights in every ward in New York City. The most forcible and spirited resolutions and addresses were passed and published. Not only the city, but the entire country, was aroused. It was some time before the secret was known—that at each of these meetings but three persons were present, Davis and two friends.

¹ Mooney was a life-long admirer of Burr, but was ill-requited in his friendship. At Mooney's death, in 1881, a heap of unpaid bills for goods charged to Burr was found.

² American Citizen, July 18, 1809.

Though Davis was credited with the authorship of these methods, it is not so certain that he did not receive his lessons from Burr. Besides Davis, Burr's chief protégés, all of whom became persons of importance in early New York, were Jacob Barker, John and Robert Swartwout, John and William P. Van Ness; Benjamin Romaine, Isaac Pierson, John P. Haff and Jacob Hayes.¹ When Burr was in disgrace William P. Van Ness, at that time the patron of the law student Martin Van Buren, wrote a long pamphlet defending him. At the time of his duel with Hamilton these men supported him. They made Tammany his machine; and it is clear that they were attached to him sincerely, for long after his trial for treason, Tammany Hall, under their influence, tried unsuccessfully to restore him to some degree of political power. Burr controlled Tammany Hall from 1797 until even after his fall. From then on to about 1835 his protégés either controlled it or were its influential men. The phrase, "the old Burr faction still active," is met with as late as 1832, and the Burrrites were a considerable factor in politics for several years thereafter. Nearly every one of the Burr leaders, as will be shown, was guilty of some act of official or private peculation.

¹ Hayes, as High Constable of the city from 1800 to 1850, was a character in old New York. He was so devoted to Burr that he named his second son for him.

These were the men Burr used in changing the character of the Tammany Society. The leader and his satellites were quite content to have the Tammany rank and file parade in Indian garb and use savage ceremonies; such forms gave the people an idea of pristine simplicity which was a good enough cloak for election scheming. Audacious to a degree and working through others, Burr was exceedingly adroit. One of his most important moves was the chartering of the Manhattan Bank. Without this institution Tammany would have been quite ineffective. In those days banks had a mightier influence over politics than is now thought. New York had only one bank, and that one was violently Federalist. Its affairs were administered always with a view to contributing to Federalist success. The directors loaned money to their personal and party friends with gross partiality and for questionable purposes. If a merchant dared help the opposite party or offended the directors he was taught to repent his independence by a rejection of his paper when he most needed cash.

Burr needed this means of monopoly and favoritism to make his political machine complete, as well as to amass funds. He, therefore, had introduced into the Legislature (1799) a bill, apparently for the purpose of diminishing the future possibility of yellow fever in New York City, incorporating a company, styled the Manhattan Company, to supply pure, wholesome water.

Supposing the charter granted nothing more than this, the legislators passed it. They were much surprised later to hear that it contained a carefully worded clause vesting the Manhattan Company with banking powers.¹ The Manhattan Bank speedily adopted the prevailing partisan tactics. ✓✓

Tammany's Initial Campaign.

The campaign of 1800 was full of personal and party bitterness and was contested hotly. To evade the election laws disqualifying the poor, and working to the advantage of the Federalists, Tammany had recourse to artifice. Poor Republicans, being unable individually to meet the property qualification, clubbed together and bought property. On the three election days² Hamilton made speeches at the polls for the Federalists, and Burr directed political affairs for the Republicans. Tammany used every influence, social and political, to carry the city for Jefferson.

Assemblymen then were not elected by wards, but in bulk, the Legislature in turn selecting the Presidential electors. The Republican Assembly candidates in New York City were elected³ by a majority of one, the vote of a butcher, Thomas Winship, being the decisive ballot. The Legislature selected Republican electors. This threw the Presidential contest into the House of Representatives, insuring Jefferson's success. Though Burr was the choice of the Tammany chiefs, Jefferson was a favored second. Tammany claimed to have brought about the result; and the claim was generally allowed.¹

¹ Hammond, I: 129-30.

² Until 1840 three days were required for elections in the city and State. In the earlier period ballots were invariably written.

³ During the greater part of the first quarter of the century members of the Legislature, Governor and certain other State officers were elected in April, the Aldermen being elected in November.

Local Triumph Secured.

The success of the Republicans in 1800 opened new possibilities to the members of the Tammany Society. Jefferson richly rewarded some of them with offices. In 1801 they advanced their sway further. The society had declared that one of its objects was the repeal of the odious election laws. For the present, however, it schemed to circumvent them. The practice of the previous year of the collective buying of property to meet the voting qualifications was continued. Under the society's encouragement, and with money probably furnished by it, thirty-nine poor Republicans in November, 1801, bought a house and lot of ground in the Fifth Ward. Their votes turned the ward election. The thirty-nine were mainly penniless students and mechanics; among them were such men as Daniel G. Tompkins, future Governor of New York and Vice-President of the United States; Richard Riker, coming Recorder of New York City; William P. Van Ness, ¹ Shortly after Jefferson's inauguration Matthew L. Davis called upon the President at Washington and talked in a boastful spirit of the immense influence New York had exerted, telling Jefferson that his elevation was brought about solely by the power and management of the Tammany Society. Jefferson listened. Then reaching out his hand and catching a large fly, he requested Davis to note the remarkable disproportion in size between one portion of the insect and its body. The hint was not lost on Davis, who, though not knowing whether Jefferson referred to New York or to him, ceased to talk on the subject.

United States Judge to be, Tennis Wortman, William A. Davis, Robert Swartwout and John L. Broome, all of whom became men of power.

The result in the Fifth Ward, and in the Fourth Ward, where seventy Tammany votes had been secured through the joint purchase of a house and lot at 50 Dey street, gave the society a majority in the Common Council.¹ The Federalist Aldermen decided to throw out these votes, as being against the spirit of the law, and to seat their own party candidates. The Republican Mayor, Edward Livingston, who presided over the deliberations, maintained that he had a right to vote.² His vote made a tie. The Tammany, or Republican, men were arbitrarily seated, upon which, on December 14, 1801, eight Federalists seceded, to prevent a quorum;³ they did not return until the following March.

The Tammany Society members, or as they were called until 1813 or 1814, the Martling Men (from their meeting place), soon had a far more interesting task than fighting Federalists. This was the long, bitter warfare, extending over twenty-six years, which they waged against De Witt Clinton, one of the ablest politicians New York has known, and remembered by a grateful posterity as the creator of the Erie Canal.

¹ The Common Council from 1780 to 1880 consisted of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, sitting as one board. The terms "Board of Aldermen" and "Common Council" are used interchangeably.

² MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 13 : 351-52.

³ Ibid, 353-56.

CHAPTER III.

TAMMANY QUABBELS WITH DE WITT CLINTON.

1802-1809.

The quarrel between Tammany and De Witt Clinton arose from Clinton's charge in 1802 that Burr was a traitor to the Republican party and had conspired to defeat Jefferson. De Witt Clinton was a nephew of George Clinton. When a very young man he was Scribe of the Tammany Society. Owing to the influence of his powerful relative, backed by his own ability, he had become a United States Senator, at the promising age of thirty-three. His principal fault was his unbridled temper, which led him to speak harshly of those who displeased him. George Clinton thought himself, on account of his age and long public service, entitled to the place and honors heaped upon Burr, whom he despised as an unprincipled usurper. He was too old, however, to carry on a contest, and De Witt Clinton undertook to shatter the Burr faction for him. To oppose the Tammany Society, which embraced in itself nearly all there was of the Republican party in New York City, was no slight matter. But De Witt Clinton, with the confidence that comes of steady, rapid advancement, went about it aggressively. He had extraordinary qualities of mind and heart which raised him far above the mere politicians of his day.

Such of the elective offices as were allowed the city were filled by the Tammany Republicans from 1800 to 1808. State Senators, Assemblymen and Aldermen were elective, but the Mayor, Sheriff, Recorder, Justices of the Peace of counties—in fact, nearly all civil and military officers from the heads of departments and Judgeships of the Supreme Court down to even auctioneers—were appointed by a body at Albany known as the Council of Appointment, which was one of the old constitutional devices for centralizing political power. Four State Senators, chosen by the Assembly, comprised, with the Governor, this Council. Gov. Clinton, as president of this board, claimed the exclusive right of nomination, and effectually concentrated in himself all the immense power it yielded. He had De Witt Clinton transferred from the post of United States Senator to that of Mayor of New York City in 1803, and filled offices in all the counties with his relatives or partisans. The spoils system was in full force, as exemplified by the Council's sudden and frequent changes. Though swaying New York City, Tammany could get only a few State and city offices, the Clintons holding the power elsewhere throughout the State and in the Council of Appointment. Hence in fighting the Clintons, Tammany confronted a power much superior in resources.

One of the first moves of the Clintons was to get control of the Manhattan Bank. They caused John Swartwout, Burr's associate director, to be turned out. Some words ensued, and De Witt Clinton styled Swartwout a liar, a scoundrel and a villain. Swartwout set about resenting the insult in the gentlemanly mode of the day. Clinton readily accepted a challenge, and five shots were fired, two of which hit Swartwout, who, upon being asked whether he had had enough said that he had not ; but the duel was stopped by the seconds.

Burr's Downfall.

While the Clintons were searching for a good pretext to overthrow Burr, the latter injudiciously supplied it himself when in 1804 he opposed the election of Morgan Lewis, his own party's nominee for Governor. Burr's action gave rise to much acrimony; and from that time he was ostracized by every part of the Republican party in New York except the chiefs of the Tammany Society, or Martling Men. He fell altogether into disgrace with the general public when he shot Alexander Hamilton in a duel, July 11, 1804. Tammany, however, still clung to him. Two of Tammany's chiefs—Nathaniel Pendleton and William P. Van Ness—accompanied Burr to the field; John Swartwout, another chief, was at Burr's house awaiting his return. The Tammany men looked upon much of the excitement over Hamilton's death as manufactured. But as if to yield to public opinion, the society on July 13 issued a notice to its members to join in the procession to pay the "last tribute of respect to the manes of Hamilton."

In the inflamed state of public feeling which condemned everything connected with Burr and caused his indictment in two States, the Sachems knew it would be unwise for a time to make any attempt to restore him to political power. They found their opportunity in December, 1805, when, strangely enough, De Witt Clinton, forced by the exigencies of politics, made overtures to form a union with the Burrrites in order to resist the powerful Livingston family, which, with Gov.

Morgan Lewis at its head, was threatening the Clinton family. The Burrites thought they would get the better of the bargain and be able to re-instate their chief.

The negotiators met secretly February 20, 1806, at Dyde's Hotel. John Swartwout and the other Tammany chiefs insisted as conditions of the union that Burr should be recognized as a Republican; that his friends should be well cared for in the distribution of offices, and that "Burrism" should never be urged as an objection against them. The Clintons, anxious to beat down the Livingstons, were ready to agree to these terms, knowing that Burr's prestige was utterly swept away and that any effort of his followers to thrust him forward again would be a failure. Clintonites and Burrites set to drinking hilariously as a token of good will. But their joy was premature.

When the body of the Tammany men learned of the arrangement they were aroused. The Sachems drew off, and the Tammany Society continued to revile Clinton and to be reviled in return.

Political Organization Begun.

It was just before this that the Tammany Hall political organization, as apparently distinct from the Tammany Society, was created. In 1805 the society made application for, and obtained from the Legislature, the charter, which still remains in force, incorporating it as a benevolent and charitable body "for the purpose of affording relief to the indigent and distressed members of said association, their widows and orphans and others who may be proper objects of their charity."

The wording of the charter deluded only the simple.

Everybody knew that the society was the centre around which the Republican politics of the city revolved. It had its public and its secret aspects. "This society," says Longworth's American Almanac, New York Register and City Directory for 1807-1808, in a description of Tammany, "has a constitution in two parts—public and private—the public relates to all external or public matters; and the private, to the arcana and all transactions which do not meet the public eye, and on which its code of laws are founded."

The Sachems knew that to continue appearing as a political club would be most impolitic. Year after year since 1798 the criticisms directed at the self-appointed task of providing candidates for the popular suffrage grew louder. In 1806 these murmurings extended to Tammany's own voters. Honest Republicans began to voice their suspicions of caucuses which never met and public meetings called by nobody knew whom. The Sachems, though perfectly satisfied with the established forms which gave them such direct authority, wisely recognized the need of a change.

It was agreed that the Republicans should assemble in each ward to choose a ward committee of three and that these ward committees should constitute a general committee, which should have the power of convening all public meetings of the party and of making preparatory arrangements for approaching elections. This was the origin of the Tammany Hall General Committee, which, consisting then of thirty members, has been expanded in present times to over five thousand members.

At about the same time each of the ten wards began sending seven delegates to Martling's, the seventy forming a nominating committee, which alone had the right to nominate candidates. The seventy met in open convention. At times each member would have a candidate for the Assembly, to which the city then sent eleven members. These improvements on the old method gave, naturally, an air of real democracy to the proceedings of the Tammany faction in the city and had the effect of softening public criticism. Yet behind the scenes the former leaders contrived to bring things about pretty much as they planned.

The action of the nominating committee was not final, however. It was a strict rule that the committee's nominations be submitted to the wards and to a later meeting of all the Republican electors who chose to attend and who would vote their approval or disapproval. If a name were voted down, another candidate was substituted by the meeting itself. This was called the "great popular meeting," and its design was supposed to vest fully in the Republican voters the choice of the candidates for whom they were to vote. But in those days, as has always been the case, most voters were so engrossed in their ordinary occupations that they gave little more attention to politics than to vote; and the leaders, except on special occasions, found it easy to fill the great popular meeting, as well as other meetings, with their friends and creatures, sending out runners, and often in the winter, sleighs, for the dilatory. To the general and nominating committees was added, several years later, a correspondence committee, which was empowered to call meetings of the party when necessary, the leaders having found the general committee too slow and cumbersome a means through which to reach that important end.

A Display of Patriotism.

To hold public favor, the Tammany Society thought prudent to make it appear that it was animated by patriotic motives instead of the desire for offices. That the people might see how dearly above all things Tammany prized its Revolutionary traditions, the society on April 13, 1808, marched in rank to Wallabout, where it laid the cornerstone of a vault in which were to be placed the bones of 11,500 patriots who had died on board the British prison ships. On April 26, the vault being completed, the remains were laid in it. The Tammany Society, headed by Benjamin Romaine and the military; the municipal officials, Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins, members of Congress, Army and Navy officers, and many other detachments of men of lesser note participated in the ceremony.

The Federalists maintained that Tammany's patriotic show was merely an election manoeuvre. Subsequent developments did not help to disprove the charge. The society proclaimed far and wide its intention of building a monument over the vault, and induced the Legislature to make a grant of land worth $1,000 for the purpose. Associations and individuals likewise contributed. The political ceremonies connected with the burial having their expected effect, Tammany forgot altogether about its project until ugly rumors, pointing to the misuse of the money collected, forced the society in 1821 to petition the Legislature for further aid in erecting the monument. On that occasion the Tammany Society was denounced bitterly. It was brought out that such was Tammany's interest in the monument that no request was ever made for the land granted by the Legislature in 1808. The Legislature, however, granted $1,000 in cash.¹ This sum was not enough; and as Tammany did not swell the amount, though its Sachems were rich with the spoils of office, a resolution was introduced in the Assembly, March 4, 1826,² stating that as the $1,000 appropriated February 27, 1821, had not been used for the purpose but remained in the hands of Benjamin Romaine, the society's treasurer, it should be returned, and threatening legal proceedings in case it was not. This resolution, slightly amended, was passed on a close vote. There is, however, no available record of what became of the $1,000.

The First Disclosures.

During three years, culminating in 1809, a series of disclosures regarding the corruption of Tammany officials astounded the city. Rumors grew so persistent that the Common Council was forced by public opinion to investigate. In the resultant revelations many Tammany chiefs suffered.

Benjamin Romaine, variously Sachem and Grand Sachem, was removed in 1806 from the office of City Controller for malfeasance, though the Common Council was controlled by his own party.³ As a trustee of corporation property he had fraudulently obtained valuable land in the heart of the city, without paying for it. The affair caused a very considerable scandal. The Common Council had repeatedly passed strong resolutions calling on him to explain. Romaine must have settled in some fashion; for there is no evidence that he was prosecuted.

¹ Journal of the Assembly, 1821: 532, also 758.

² Ibid., 1826: 750.

³ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 16: 239-40 and 405.

On January 26, 1807, Philip I. Arcularius, Superintendent of the Almshouse, and Cornelius Warner, Superintendent of Public Repairs, were removed summarily.¹ It was shown that Warner had defrauded the city as well as the men who worked under him.²

Jonas Humbert, Inspector of Bread and sometime Sachem, was proved to have extorted a third of the fees collected by Flour Inspector Jones, under the threat of having Jones put out of office. In consequence of the facts becoming known, Humbert and his associate Inspector, Christian Nestell, discreetly resigned their offices—probably to avert official investigation.³

Abraham Stagg, another of the dynasty of Grand Sachems, as Collector of Assessments failed, it was disclosed in 1808, to account for about $1,000.⁴ Two other Assessment Collectors, Samuel L. Page (for a long time prominent in Tammany councils), and Simon Ackerman, were likewise found to be embezzlers.⁵ Stagg and Page managed to make good their deficit by turning over to the city certain property, but Ackerman disappeared.

John Bingham, at times Sachem, and a noted politician of the day, managed, through his position as an Alderman, to wheedle the city into selling to his brother-in-law land which later he influenced the corporation to buy back at an exorbitant price. The Common Council, spurred by public opinion, demanded its reconveyance.⁶ Even Bingham's powerful friend, Matthew

¹ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 16:288-89.

² Ibid., 316.

³ Ibid., 18:194.

⁴ Ibid., 20:355-56.

⁵ Ibid., 50.

⁶ Ibid.

L. Davis, could not silence the scandal, for Davis himself had to meet a charge that while defending the Embargo at Martling's he was caught smuggling out flour in quantities that yielded him a desirable income.

But worse than these disclosures was that affecting the society's founder, William Mooney. The Common Council in 1808 appointed him Superintendent of the Almshouse, at an annual recompense of $1,000 and the support of his family in the place, provided that this latter item should not amount to over $500. Mooney had a more exalted idea of how he and his family ought to live. In the summer of 1809 the city fathers appointed a committee to investigate. The outcome was surprising. Mooney had spent nearly $4,000 on himself and family in addition to his salary; he had taken from the city supplies about $1,000 worth of articles, and moreover had expended various sums for "trifles for Mrs. Mooney"—a term which survived for many years in local politics. The oft-times Grand Sachem of the Tammany Society could not explain his indulgences satisfactorily, and the Common Council relieved him of the cares of office, only one Alderman voting for his retention.¹

Most of these leaders were only momentarily in-commoded, the Tammany Society continuing many of them, for years after, in positions of trust and influence. Mooney subsequently was repeatedly chosen Grand Sachem and Father of the Council; Romaine was elected Grand Sachem in 1808, again in 1813, and frequently Sachem; Matthew L. Davis was elected Grand Sachem in 1814 and re-elected in 1815 and was a Sachem for years later; Abraham Staggs remained a leader and continued to get contracts for street paving and regulating, and neither Jonas Humbert nor John Bingham suffered a loss of influence with the Wigwam men.

¹ Ibid., 20:303. The full report on Mooney's administration appears in Ibid., 376-92.

Meanwhile the Sachems were professing the highest virtue. The society's calls for meetings ran like this:

"Tammany Society, or Columbian Order—Brothers, You are requested to assemble around the council fire in the Great Wigwam, No. 1, on Saturday, the 12th inst., at 9 o'clock A. M. (wearing a bucktail in your hat), to celebrate the anniversary of the Columbian Order and recount to each other the deeds of our departed chiefs and warriors in order that it may stimulate us to imitate them in whatever is virtuous and just."¹

The public, however, took another view of the matter. These scandals, and the showing of a deficit in the city's accounts of $250,000, hurt Tammany's prestige considerably. The Republican strength in the city at the election of April, 1809, showed a decrease of six hundred votes, the majority being only 116, while the Federalists carried the State, and thus secured control of the Council of Appointment.

Tammany Enforces Discipline.

The lesson was lost on the leaders. The society at this time was led by various men, of whom Teunis Wortman² was considered the chief power. Wortman was as enraged at the defection of these few hundred voters as his successors were at a later day at an adverse majority of tens of thousands. He caused a meeting to be held at Martling's on May 19, and secured the appointment of a committee, with one member from each of the ten wards, instructed to inquire into the causes contributing to lessen Tammany's usual majority. The committee was further instructed to call a general meeting of the Republican citizens of the county, on the completion of its investigation, and to report to them, that it might be known who were their friends and who their enemies. Here is to be seen the first manifestation of that systematic discipline which Tammany Hall thereafter exercised. Wortman's plan excited both Clintonites and Federalists. The committee was called "the committee of spies," and was regarded generally as the beginning of a system of intimidation and proscription.

¹ Advertisement in the Columbian, May 14, 1810.

² Wortman had been a follower of Clinton and had been generously aided by him. He suddenly shifted to Tammany, on seeing better opportunities of advancement with that body.

In the passionate acrimony of the struggle between Tammany and the Clintons, the Federalists seemed to be well-nigh forgotten. The speakers and writers of each side assailed the other with great fury. One of these was James Cheetham, a Clinton supporter and editor of the American Citizen. Goaded by his strictures, the Tammany Society on the night of February 28, 1809, expelled him from membership on the grounds that he had assailed the general Government and villified Jefferson.

In the American Citizen of March 1, Cheetham replied that the resolution was carried by trickery. "Tammany Society," Cheetham continued, "was chartered by the Legislature of the State for charitable purposes. Not a member of the Legislature, when it was chartered, imagined, I dare to say, that it would be thus perverted to the worst purposes of faction." On May 1 he sent this note to the Grand Sachem:

"Sir, I decline membership in Tammany Society. Originally national and Republican, it has degenerated into a savage barbarity."

Cheetham then wrote to Grand Sachem Cowdrey for a certified copy of the proceedings, saying he wanted it to base an action which he would bring for the annulment of the charter of the Tammany Society for misuser. Cowdrey expressed regret at not being able to accommodate him. "Tammany Society," wrote Cowdrey,

"is an institution that has done much good and may and undoubtedly will do more. * * * I do not think one error can or ought to cancel its long list of good actions and wrest from it its charter of incorporation, the basis of its stability and existence."

The American Citizen thereupon bristled with fiercer attacks upon Tammany. "Jacobin clubs," says "A Disciple of Washington," in this newspaper, July 29, 1809,

"are becoming organized to overawe, not only the electors but the elected under our government; such are the Washington and the Tammany Societies. The latter was originally instituted for harmless purposes and long remained harmless in its acts; members from all parties were admitted to it; but we have seen it become a tremendous political machine. * * * * * The Washington Jacobin Club, it is said, consists of at least two thousand rank and file, and the Tammany Jacobins to perhaps as many. * * * The time will come, and that speedily, when the Legislature, the Governor and the Council of Appointment shall not dare to disobey their edicts."

Tammany retaliated upon Cheetham by having a bill passed by the Legislature taking away from him the position of State Printer, which paid $3,000 a year.

Clinton Again Suggests Compromise.

Tammany's comparative weakness in the city, as shown in the recent vote, prompted Clinton to suggest a compromise and union of forces. Overtures were made by his agents, and on July 13, 1809, twenty-eight of the leaders of the Clinton, Madison, Burr and Lewis factions met in a private room at Coleman's Fair House. Matthew L. Davis told them the chiefs ought to unite; experience demonstrated that if they did they would lead the rest—meaning the voters. Tammany he said welcomed a union of the Republican forces so as to prevent the election of a Federalist Council of Appointment. Davis and Wortman proposed that they unite to prevent any removals from office; that the two opposition Republican clubs in turn should be destroyed and that their members should go back to the Tammany Society, which, being on the decline, must be re-inforced. Or, if it should be thought advisable to put down the Tammany Society, "considering its prevailing disrepute," then a new society should be organized in which Burr-ites, Lewisites, Clintonites and Madisonians were to be admitted members under the general family and brotherly name of Republican.

De Witt Clinton cautiously kept away from this meeting, allowing his lieutenants to do the work of outwitting Tammany. A committee of ten was appointed to consider whether a coalition of the chiefs were practicable; whether, if it were, the people would agree to it; whether the Whig (opposition Republican) clubs should be destroyed and whether the Tammany Society should be re-inforced.

The meeting came to naught. In this effort to win over the Tammany chiefs, De Witt Clinton abandoned his protégé and dependent, Cheetham, who had made himself obnoxious to them. Finding Clinton's political and financial support withdrawn, Cheetham, out of revenge, published the proceedings of this secret meeting in the American Citizen, and, awakening public indignation, closed the bargaining. A few nights later a Tammany mob threw brickbats in the windows of Cheetham's house. By his death, on September 19, 1810, Tammany was freed from one of its earliest and most vindictive assailants.

CHAPTER IV.

SLOW RECOVERY FROM DISASTER.

1809-1815.

The Tammany men fared badly for a time. During 1809 the Council of Appointment removed numbers of them from office. In November the Federalists elected a majority of their Aldermanic ticket, and in April, 1810, they elected their Assembly ticket by the close majority of 36. Even when the Federalists were beaten the following year, it brought no good to Tammany, for a Clintonite Council of Appointment dispensed the offices. Clinton, though ousted from the Mayoralty, in 1810 to make room for the Federalist Jacob Radcliff, was again made Mayor in the Spring of 1811.

But before long affairs took another turn. Tammany was the only real Republican organization in the city. It stood for the national party. As men were inclined to vote more for party success than for particular local nominees, Tammany's candidates were certain to be swept in at some time on the strength of party adherence. While the rank and file of the organization were concerned in seeing its candidates successful only inasmuch as that meant the success of democratic principles, the leaders intrigued constantly for spoils at the expense of principles. But whatever their conduct might be, they were sure of success when the next wave of Republican feeling carried the party to victory.

De Witt Clinton's following was largely personal.

Drawing, it was estimated, from $10,000 to $20,000 a year in salary and fees as Mayor, he lived in high style and distributed bounty liberally among his supporters. His income aroused the wonder of his contemporaries. The President of the United States received $25,000 annually; the Mayor of Philadelphia, $2,000. "Posterity," said one observer, "will read with astonishment that a Mayor of New York should make the enormous sum of $15,000 out of his office." This was no inconsequential salary at a time when a man worth $50,000 was thought rich; when a good house could be rented for $350 a year, and $750 or $800 would meet the expenses of the average family. Many of those whom Clinton helped picked a quarrel with him later, in order to have a pretext for the repudiation of their debts, and joined Tammany.

Tammany and the Aliens.

Tammany had the party machine, but Clinton had a powerful hold on the lower classes, especially the Irish. As United States Senator he had been foremost in having the naturalization period reduced from fourteen to five years, and he made himself popular with them in other ways. He, himself, was of Irish descent.

The Irish were bitter opponents of Tammany Hall. The prejudice against allowing "adopted citizens" to mingle in politics was deep; and Tammany claimed to be a thoroughly native body. As early as May 12, 1791, at Campbell's Tavern, Greenwich, the Tammany Society had announced that being a national body, it consisted of Americans born, who would fill all offices; though adopted Americans were eligible to honorary posts, such as warriors and hunters. An "adopted citizen" was looked upon as an "exotic." Religious feeling, too, was conspicuous. It was only after repeated hostile demonstrations that Tammany would consent, in 1809, for the first time to place a Catholic—Patrick McKay—upon its Assembly ticket.

The Society Erects a Wigwam.

The accession of the Livingston family had helped the society, adding the support of a considerable faction and "respectability." The Livingstons, intent on superseding the Clintons, seized on Tammany as a good lever. Above all, it was necessary to have a full application of "respectability," and to further that end the society put up a pretentious building—the present Sun newspaper building. In 1802 the Tammany Society had tried by subscription to build a fine Wigwam, but was unsuccessful. The unwisdom of staying in such a place as Martling's, which subjected them to gibes, and which was described as "the Den where the Wolves and Bears and Panthers assemble and drink down large potations of beer," was impressed upon the Sachems who, led by Jacob Barker, the largest shipbuilder in the country at the time, raised the sum of $28,000. The new Wigwam was opened in 1811, with the peculiar Indian ceremonies. Sachem Abraham M. Valentine—the same man who, for malfeasance, was afterward (May 26, 1830) removed from the office of Police Magistrate¹—was the grand marshal of the day.

From 1811 the Tammany, or Martling, men came under the general term of the Tammany Hall party or Tammany Hall; the general committee was called technically the Democratic-Republican General Committee. The Tammany Society, with its eleven hundred members, now more than ever appeared distinct from the Tammany Hall political body. Though the general committee was supplied with the use of rooms and the hall in the building, it met on different nights from the society, and to all appearances acted independently of it. But the society, in fact, was and continued to be, the secret ruler of the political organization. Its Sachems were chosen yearly from the most influential of the local Tammany political leaders.

¹ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 72: 187. Judge Irving and an Aldermanic committee, after a searching investigation, found Valentine guilty of receiving from prisoners money for which he did not account to the city.

Clinton's Ambition.

De Witt Clinton aimed to be President of the United States and schemed for his nomination by the Republican Legislative caucus. Early in 1811 he sought and received from the caucus the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor. He purposed to hold both the offices of Mayor and Lieutenant-Governor, while spending as much time as he could at Albany so as to bring his direct influence to bear in person. As a State officer he could do this without loss of dignity. He would have preferred the post of State Senator, but he feared if he stood for election in New York City Tammany would defeat him. The chiefs, regarding his nomination as treachery toward Madison, immediately held a meeting and issued a notice that they ceased to consider him a member of the Republican party; that he was not only opposing Madison but was bent on establishing a pernicious family aristocracy.

When the Clinton men tried to hold a counter meeting at the Union Hotel a few days later, the Tammany men rushed in and put them to flight.¹ Tammany was so anxious to defeat Clinton that it supported the Federalist candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, defeating the aggressive Mayor. But Clinton obtained the caucus nomination for President. His partisans voted the Federalist Assembly ticket (1812) rather than aid the Republican ticket of Tammany Hall. Assisted by the Federalists, Clinton received the electoral vote of New York State, but was overwhelmed by Madison. His course seemed precisely that with which Tammany had charged him—treason to the party to which he professed to belong. In a short time the Wigwam succeeded in influencing nearly all the Republicans in New York City against him.

Tammany's Support of the War of 1812.

One other event helped to bring back strength and prestige to Tammany Hall. This was the War of 1812, which Tammany called for and supported. On February 26, four months before war was declared, the Tammany Society passed resolutions recommending immediate war with Great Britain unless she should repeal her "Orders in Council." The members pledged themselves to support the Government "in that just and necessary war" with their "lives, fortunes and sacred honor." The conservative element execrated Tammany, but the supporters of the war came to look upon it more favorably, and about a thousand persons, some of whom had been members before but had ceased attendance, applied for membership. Throughout the conflict Tammany Hall was the resort of the war-party. At the news of each victory the flag was hoisted to the breeze and a celebration followed. The successful military and naval men were banqueted there, while hundreds of candles illumined every window in the building. On August 31, 1814, 1150 members of the society marched to build defences in Brooklyn; but this was not done until public pressure forced it, for by August 15 at least twenty other societies, civil and trades, had volunteered, and Tammany had to make good its pretensions.

¹ Hammond, I: 294.

The leaders prospered by Madison's favor. From one contract alone Matthew L. Davis reaped $80,000, and Nathan Sanford was credited with making his office of United States District Attorney at New York yield as high as $30,000 a year. The lesser political workers were rewarded proportionately. Having a direct and considerable interest in the success of Madison's administration, they were indefatigable partisans. Some of the Tammany leaders proved their devotion to their country's cause by doing service in the Quartermaster's Department. Among these were the two Swartwouts (John and Robert), who became Generals, and Romaine, who became a Colonel.

Indian Customs Abandoned.

This war had the effect of causing the society to abandon its custom of marching in Indian garb.¹ In 1813 the Indians in the Northwest, incited by British agents, went on the war-path, torturing and scalping, devastating settlements and killing defenceless men, women and children. Their very name became repulsive to the whites. The society seemed to be callous to this feeling, and began preparations for its annual parades, in the usual Indian costumes, with painted faces, wearing bearskins and carrying papooses. The Federalists declared that these exhibitions, at all times ridiculous and absurd, would be little short of criminal after the cruelties which were being committed by the Tammany men of the wilderness. These attacks affected the Tammany Society so much that a majority of the members, consisting mainly of the politicians and young men, held a secret meeting and abolished all imitations of the Indians, in dress and manners as well as in name, and resolved that the officers should thereafter bear plain English titles.

¹ R. S. Guernsey, "New York City During the War of 1812."

Mooney opposed the change.¹ He would not listen to having those picturesque and native ceremonies, which he himself had ordained, wiped out. He resigned as Grand Sachem, and many of the Sachems went with him. On May 1, 1813, Benjamin Romaine was elected Grand Sachem, and other "reformers" were chosen as Sachems. On July 4 the Tammany Society marched with reduced numbers in ordinary civilian garb. From that time the society contented itself with civilian costume until 1825, when its parades ceased.

The attitude of the political parties to the war had the effect of making Tammany Hall the predominant force in the State, and of disorganizing the Federalist party beyond hope of recovery. Tammany began in 1813 to organize for the control of the State and to put down for all time De Witt Clinton, whom it denounced as having tried to paralyze the energies of Madison's administration. Meanwhile the Federalist leaders in the city, with a singular lack of tact, were constantly offending the popular feeling with their political doctrines and their haughty airs of superior citizenship. To such an extent was this carried that at times they were mobbed, as on June 29, 1814, for celebrating the return of the Bourbons to the French throne.

¹ Mooney had now become opulent, being the owner of three or four houses and lots.

Changes in the Organization.

The organization of Tammany Hall, begun, as has been seen, by the formation of the general, nominating and correspondence committees, in 1806 and 1808, was now further elaborated. A finance committee, whose duty it was to gather for the leaders a suitable campaign fund, was created, and this was followed by the creation of the Republican Young Men's General Committee,¹ which was a sort of auxiliary to the general committee, having limited powers, and serving as a province for the ambitions of the young men. The Democratic-Republican General Committee was supposed to comprise only the trusted ward leaders, ripe with years and experience. About the beginning of the War of 1812, it added to its duties the issuing of long public addresses on political topics. These general committees were made self-perpetuating. At the close of every year they would issue a notice to the voters when and where to meet for the election of their successors. No sooner did the committee of one year step out than the newly elected committee instantly took its place. There were also ward or vigilance committees, which were expected to bring every Tammany-Republican voter to the polls, to see that no Federalist intimidation was attempted and to campaign for the party. The Tammany Hall organization was in a superb state by the year 1814, and in active operation ceaselessly. The Federalists, on the contrary, were scarcely organized, and the Clintonites had declined to a mere faction.

¹ The moving spirit in this committee for some years was Samuel L. Berran, who had been indicted in August, 1811, for instigating a riot in Trinity Church, convicted and fined $100.

The Tammany leaders, moreover, were shrewd and conciliating. About forty Federalists—disgusted, they said, with their party's opposition to the war—joined the Tammany Society. They were led by Gulian C. Verplanck, who severely assailed Clinton, much to the Wigwam's delight. Tammany Hall not only received them with warmth, but advanced nearly all of them, such as Jacob Radcliff, Richard Hadfelt, Richard Riker and Hugh Maxwell, to the first public positions. This was about the beginning of that policy, never since abandoned, by which Tammany Hall has frequently broken up opposing parties or factions. The winning over of leaders from the other side and conferring upon them rewards in the form of profitable public office or contracts has been one of the most notable methods of Tammany's diplomacy.

CHAPTER V.

TAMMANY IN ABSOLUTE CONTROL.

1815-1817.

By 1815 Tammany Hall obtained control of the State, and in 1816 completely regained that of the city. The Common Council and its dependent offices since 1809 had been more or less under Federalist rule, and from the beginning of the century the city had had a succession of Clintonite office-holders in those posts controlled by the Council of Appointment.

At the close of the War of 1812 the population of the city approached 100,000, and there were 13,941 voters in all. The total expenses of the municipality reached a little over a million dollars. The city had but one public school, which was maintained by public subscription. Water was supplied chiefly by the Manhattan Company, by means of bored wooden logs laid underground from the reservoir in Chambers street. No fire department was dreamed of, and every blaze had the city at its mercy. The streets were uncleaned ; only two or three thoroughfares were fit for the passage of carriages, though until 1834 the law required the inhabitants to clean the streets in front of their houses. Many of those elaborate departments which we now associate with political control were then either in an embryo state or not thought of.

The Aldermen were not overburdened with public anxieties. No salary was attached to the office, yet none the less, it was sought industriously. In early days it was regarded as a post of honor and filled as such, but with the beginning of the century it was made a means of profit. The professional politician of the type of to-day was rare. The Aldermen had business, as a rule, upon which they depended and to which they attended in the day, holding sessions of the board sporadically at night. The only exception to this routine was when the Alderman performed some judicial office. Under the law, as soon as an Alderman entered office he became a judge of some of the most important courts, being obliged to preside with the Mayor at the trial of criminals. This system entailed upon the Aldermen the trial of offences against laws many of which they themselves made, and it had an increasingly pernicious influence upon politics. Otherwise the sole legal perquisites and compensation of the Aldermen consisted in their power and custom of making appropriations, including those for elaborate public dinners for themselves. It was commonly known that they awarded contracts for city necessities either to themselves or to their relatives.

The backward state of the city, its filthy and neglected condition and the chaotic state of public improvements and expenditures, excited little public discussion. The Common Councils were composed of men of inferior mind. It is told of one of them that hearing that the King of France had taken umbrage he ran home post haste to get his atlas and find out the location of that particular spot. In the exclusive charge of such a body New York City would have struggled along but slowly had it not been for the courage and genius of the man who at one stroke started it on a dazzling career of prosperity. This was De Witt Clinton.

The Council Removes Clinton.

No sooner did a Republican Council of Appointment step into office, early in 1815, than Tammany Hall pressed for the removal of Clinton as Mayor and announced that John Ferguson, the Grand Sachem of the Society, would have to be appointed in his place.¹ The Council, at the head of which was Gov. Tompkins, wavered and delayed, Tompkins not caring to offend the friends of Clinton by the latter's summary removal. At this the entire Tammany representation, which had gone to Albany for the purpose, grew furious and threatened that not only would they nominate no ticket the next Spring, but would see that none of their friends should accept office under the Council, did it fail to remove Clinton. This action implied the turning out of the Council of Appointment at the next election. Yielding to these menaces, the Council removed Clinton. Then by a compromise, Ferguson was made Mayor until the National Government should appoint him Naval Officer when Jacob Radcliff (Mayor 1810-1811) was to succeed him—an arrangement which was carried out.²

The Wigwam was overjoyed at having struck down Clinton, and now expected many years of supremacy. From youth Clinton's sole occupation had been politics. He had spent his yearly salaries and was deeply in debt. His political aspirations seemed doomed. Stripped, as he appeared, of a party or even a fraction of one, the Sachems felt sure of his retirement to private life forever. In this belief they were as much animated by personal as by political enmity. Clinton had sneered at or ridiculed nearly all of them, and he spoke of them habitually in withering terms.

¹ Hammond, I : 399.

² Valentine in his "Manual of the Common Council of New York," for 1842-44 : 163, states that Ferguson held on to both offices until President Monroe required him to say which office he preferred. Ferguson soon after, resigned the Mayoralty. He held the other post until his death in 1832.

Besides, to enlarge their power in the city they needed the Mayor's office. The Mayor had the right to appoint a Deputy Mayor from among the Aldermen, the Deputy Mayor acting with full power in his absence. The Mayor could convene the Common Council, and he appointed and licensed marshals, porters, carriers, cartmen, carmen, cryers, scullers and scavengers, and removed them at pleasure. He licensed tavern-keepers and all who sold excisable liquors by retail. The Mayor, the Deputy Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen were ex-officio Justices of the Peace, and were empowered to hold Courts of General Sessions. The Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen were also Justices of Oyer and Terminer; and the Mayor, Deputy Mayor and Recorder could preside over the Court of Common Pleas with or without the Aldermen. The gathering of all this power into its own control gave further strength to Tammany Hall.

But the expressions of regret at Clinton's removal were so spontaneous and sincere that Tammany feigned participation in them and took the utmost pains to represent the removal as only a political exigency. The Common Council (which was now Federalist) passed, on March 21, 1815, a vote of thanks to Clinton for his able administration.¹ Curiously, the very Wigwam men who had made it their business to undertake the tedious travel over bad roads to Albany to effect his removal (Aldermen Smith, George Buckmaster, Mann and Burtis) voted loudest in favor of the resolution.

¹ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 29: 150.

Clinton Presses Erie Canal Project.

Out of office, Clinton found time to agitate for the building of a navigable canal between the great western lakes and the tide waters of the Hudson. The idea of this enterprise was not original with him. It had been suggested over thirty years before, but it was he who carried it forward to success. The bigotry and animus with which it was assailed were amazing. Tammany Hall frequently passed resolutions denouncing the project as impracticable and chimerical, declaring that the canal would make a ditch fit to bury its author in. At Albany the Tammany representatives greeted the project with a burst of mockery, and placed obstacle after obstacle in its path.

The Wigwam Makes Further Gains.

In the intervals of warring upon Clinton, Tammany was adroitly seizing every post of vantage in the city. The Burr men ruled its councils and directed the policy and nominations of the Republican, or, as it was getting to be more generally known, the Democratic-Republican party. Three men, in particular, were foremost as leaders—George Buckmaster, a boat builder; Roger Strong and Benjamin Prince, a druggist and physician. Teunis Wortman, one of the energetic leaders in 1807-10, was now not quite so conspicuous. What the Wigwam lacked to make its rule in the city complete was a majority in the Common Council. The committees of the Council not only had the exclusive power of expenditures, but they invariably refused an acceptable accounting.¹ The Federalists, though vanishing as a party owing to their attitude in the recent war, still managed, through local dissensions among the Republicans, to retain control of the Common Council. The Federalists, therefore, held the key to the purse. It had always been customary for the Mayor to appoint the Common Council committees from the party which happened to be dominant.

Established forms meant nothing to Mayor Radcliff and to Buckmaster² and other Tammany Aldermen, who late in December, 1815, decided to turn out the Federalist chairmen of committees and put Tammany men in their places. Radcliff imprudently printed a handbill of officers he intended appointing, copies of which he sent to his partisans. A copy fell into a

¹ As late as July 28, 1829, the Common Council refused such an accounting. Charles King, a prominent citizen, memorialized the Council, through Alderman Lozier, to furnish an itemized statement of the expenditure of over half a million dollars for the previous fiscal year. By a vote of 15 to 6 the Council refused to grant the request. A public agitation on the question following, the board later rescinded its action, and supplied the statement.

² Buckmaster had a record. On October 9, 1815, the Common Council passed a secret resolution to sell $440,000 of United States bonds it held at 97—the stock being then under par. About $30,000 worth was disposed of at that figure, when the officials found that not a dollar's worth more could be sold. Investigation followed. Gould Hoyt proved that Buckmaster had disclosed the secret to certain Wall street men, who, taking advantage of the city's plight, forced the sale of the stock at 95. Buckmaster was chairman of the general committee in 1815 and at other times and chairman of the nominating committee in 1820.

Federalist's hands. At the next meeting, before the Mayor could get a chance to act, the Federalist majority altered the rules so as to vest in future the appointment of all committees in a majority of the board. The Sachems were so enraged at Radcliff's bungling that they declared they would have him removed from office. About a year afterward they carried out their threat.

In 1816 Tammany elected not only its Congress and Assembly ticket, but a Common Council, by over 1000 majority out of 9000 votes. This victory was the result of the wily policy of further disrupting the Federalist party by nominating its most popular men. Walter Bowne, a late Federalist, an enemy of Clinton and a man of standing in the community, was one of those nominated by Tammany Hall for State Senator, and the support of the wealthy was solicited by the selection of men of their own class, such as Col. Rutgers, said to be the richest man in the State.

Tammany Diplomacy.

Most of Tammany's early members, certainly the leaders, were now rich and had stepped into the upper middle class; but their wealth could not quite secure them admittance to that stiff aristocracy above them, which demanded something more of a passport than the possession of money. Another body of members were the small tradesmen and the like, to whom denunciations of the aristocracy were extremely palatable. A third class, that of the mechanics and laborers, believed that Tammany Hall exclusively represented them in its onslaughts on the aristocracy. From the demands of these various interests arose the singular sight of Tammany Hall winning the support of the rich by systematically catering to them; of the middle class, which it reflected, and of the poor, in whose interests it claimed to work. The spirit of the Tammany Society was well illustrated in its odd address on public affairs in 1817, wherein it lamented the spread of the foreign game of billiards among the aristocratic youth and the prevalence of vice among the lower classes. Again, in May, 1817, the Tammany majority of the Common Council, under pressure from the religious element, passed an ordinance fining every person $5 who should hunt, shoot, fish, spar or play on Sunday—a law which cut off from the poor their favorite pastimes.

The Power of "Regularity."

Here, too, another of the secrets by which the organization was enabled to thrive, should be mentioned. This was the "regularity" of its nominations. Teunis Wortman, a few years before, had disclosed the real substance of the principle of "regularity" when he wrote: "The nominating power is an omnipotent one. Though it approaches us in the humble attitude of the recommendation, its influence is irresistible. Every year's experience demonstrates that its recommendations are commands. That instead of presenting a choice it deprives us of all option."¹ The plain meaning was that, regardless of the candidate's character, the mass of the party would vote for him once he happened to be put forth on the "regular" ticket. Fully alive to the value of this particular power, the Tammany Hall General Committee, successively and unfailingly, would invite in its calls for all meetings "those friendly to regular nominations." Its answer to charges of dictatorship was plain and direct. Discipline was necessary, its leaders said, to prevent aristocrats from disrupting their party by inciting a variety of nominations.

¹ New York Public Advertiser, April 13 1809. This journal was secretly supported for a time by the funds of the Tammany Society.

It was through this fertile agency that "bossism" became an easy possibility. With the voters in such a receptive state of mind it was not difficult to dictate nominations. The general committee was composed of thirty members; its meetings were secret and attended seldom by more than fourteen members. So, substantially, fourteen men were acting for over five thousand Republican voters, and eight members of the fourteen composed a majority. Yet the system had all the pretence of being pure democracy; the wards were called upon at regular intervals to elect delegates; the latter chose candidates or made party rules; and the "great popular meeting" accepted or rejected nominees; it all seemed to spring directly from the people.

This exquisitely working machine was in full order when the organization secured a firm hold upon the city in 1816. The newly elected Common Council removed every Federalist possible and put a staunch Tammany man in his place. The Federalist Captains of Police and the heads and subordinates of many departments whose appointment and removal were vested in the Common Council were all ejected. This frequent practice of changes in the police force, solely because of political considerations, had a demoralizing effect upon the welfare of the city.

Both parties were as responsible for this state of affairs as they were for the increase in the city's debt. To provide revenue the Aldermen repeatedly caused to be sold ground owned by the municipality in the heart of the city. This was one of their clumsy or fraudulent methods of concealing the squandering of city funds, on what no one knew. They were not ignorant that with the growth of the city the value of the land would increase vastly. It was perhaps for this very reason they sold it; for it was generally themselves or the Tammany leaders who were the buyers. One sale was of land fronting Bowling Green, among the purchasers being John Swartwout, Jacob Barker and John Sharpe. A hint as to the fraudulent ways in which the Tammany leaders became rich is furnished by a report made to the Common Council respecting land in Hamilton Square, bought from the city by Jacob Barker, John S. Hunn and others. The report stated that repeated applications for the payment of principal and interest had been made without effect.¹

Clinton Nominated for Governor.

By 1817 the Federalists in New York City were crushed, quite beyond hope of resurrection as a winning party. The only remaining fear was Clinton, whose political death the organization celebrated prematurely. Public opinion was one factor Tammany had not conquered.

This inclined more and more daily to the support of Clinton. Notwithstanding all the opposition which narrow-mindedness and hatred could invent, Clinton's grand project of the Erie Canal became popular—distinctively so throughout the State, then so greatly agricultural. On April 15, 1817, the bill pledging the State to the building of the canal became a law, the Tammany delegation and all their friends voting against it.

¹ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 18: 859.

Gov. Tompkins becoming Vice-President, a special election to fill the gubernatorial vacancy became necessary. A new and powerful junction of Clinton's old friends and the disunited Federalists joined in nominating him to succeed Tompkins. This was bitter news to Tammany, which made heroic efforts to defeat him, nominating as its candidate Peter B. Porter, and sending tickets with his name into every county in the State.

Irish Invade the Wigwam.

Inopportunistically for the Wigwam, the resentment of the Irish broke out against it at this time. Tammany's long-continued refusal to give the Irish proper representation among its nominations, either in the society or for public office, irritated them greatly. On February 7, a writer in a newspaper over the signature "Connal," averred in an open letter to Matthew L. Davis that on the evening of February 3, the Tammany Society had considered a resolution for the adoption of a new constitution, the object of which was to exclude foreigners entirely from holding office in the society. This may not have been strictly true, but the anti-foreign feeling in the organization was unquestionably strong. The Irish had sought, some time before, to have the organization nominate for Congress Thomas Addis Emmett, an Irish orator and patriot and an ardent friend of Clinton. As Tammany Hall since 1802 had not only invariably excommunicated all Clintonites, but had broken up such Clinton meetings as were held, this demand was refused without discussion. The Irish grew to regard Tammany Hall as the home of bigotry; the Wigwam, in turn, was resolved not to alienate the prejudiced native support by recognizing foreigners; furthermore, the Irish were held to be Clintonites trying to get into Tammany Hall and control it.

The long-smouldering enmity burst out on the night of April 24, 1817, when the general committee was in session. Two hundred Irishmen, assembled at Dooley's Long Room, marched in rank to the Wigwam and broke into the meeting room. The intention of their leaders was to impress upon the committee the wisdom of nominating Emmett for Congress, as well as other Irish Catholics on the Tammany ticket in future, but the more fiery spirits at once started a fight. Eyes were blackened, noses and heads battered freely. The invaders broke the furniture, using it for weapons and shattering it maliciously; tore down the fixtures and shivered the windows. Re-inforcements arriving, the intruders were driven out, but not before nearly all present had been bruised and beaten.¹

Clinton Elected.

Clinton received an overwhelming majority for Governor, Porter obtaining a ridiculously small vote in both ¹ The National Advocate, May 10, asserted that the Irish entered Tammany Hall, shouting "Down with the Natives!" but the assertion was denied.

New York City and the rest of the State.¹ Thus in the feud between Tammany Hall and DeWitt Clinton, the latter, lacking a political machine and basing his contest solely on a political idea—that of internal improvements—emerged triumphant.

¹ Clinton's vote was nearly 44,000 ; Porter's not quite 1,400.

CHAPTER VI.

CLINTON MAINTAINS HIS SUPREMACY.

1817-1820.

With Gov. Clinton at the head of the Council of Appointment, Tammany men expected the force of his vengeance. They were not disappointed. He removed many of them for no other reason than that they belonged to the organization.

Hoping to make terms with him, the Wigwam Assemblymen, early in 1818, presented to the Council of Appointment a petition praying for the removal of Mayor Radcliff and the appointment in his place of William Paulding, Jr. "Radcliff," the paper read, "is an unfit person longer to fill that honorable and respectful office." Clinton smiled at this ambidexterity. It was rumored that he intended to award the honor to Cadwallader D. Colden, a Federalist supporter of the War of 1812, and one of the Federalists Tammany Hall had sent to the Assembly in 1817, as a means of breaking up that party. Colden now let it be understood that he sided with Clinton.

The whole Tammany delegation lived in a single house at Albany and met in a large room, No. 10, in Eagle Tavern. "This system of acting as a separate body," admitted Tammany's own organ,¹ "was very injudicious to our city. It created suspicion and distrust among country members; it looked like a separate interest; a combination of a powerful delegation to frown down or overpower the delegation of a smaller county." Colden did not join in these nightly meetings. One day he was coaxed in to take a glass of wine. To his surprise, upon opening the door of No. 10, he found the delegation in caucus. The meeting seemed to be waiting for him before transacting business. He had scarcely taken a seat, when one of the members arose, and in a long speech protested against any member of the city delegation accepting an office, and suggested that each member should pledge himself not to do so. Colden saw at once that the resolution was directed against himself. He exclaimed energetically against the trickery, declaring that he had not asked for the office of Mayor, but would accept it if offered. The meeting broke up; Colden was appointed Mayor, and Tammany Hall from that time denounced him.

¹ National Advocate, October 7, 1823. A circumstantial account of the meeting referred to on the following page appears in this issue. The paper was edited and owned by M. M. Noah, who became Grand Sachem in 1824.

Legislative Favoritism to a Sachem.

In Albany, Clinton was vigorously pushing forward the Erie Canal project; the Tammany men were as aggressively combatting it.¹ While Clinton was thus absorbed in this great public enterprise the Wigwam was enriching its leaders in manifold ways. An instance of this was the noted Barker episode. Jacob Barker was a Sachem, a leader of great influence in the political organization, and such a power in financial and business circles that at one time he defied the United States Bank. He and Matthew L. Davis were Burr's firmest friends to the hour of Burr's death. Early in 1818 a bill prohibiting private banking, prepared at the instance of the incorporated banks, which sought a monopoly, passed the Senate; though as a special favor to Barker the Senate exempted from its provisions the latter's Exchange Bank for three years. But Barker desired an indefinite lease. To create a show of public sentiment he had the hall packed with his friends and creatures on April 14, when resolutions were passed stating that the proposed bill would destroy all competition with the incorporated banks, "benefit the rich, oppress the poor, extend the power of existing aristocracies, and terminate the banking transactions of an individual whose loans have been highly advantageous to many laborious and industrious mechanics and neighboring farmers." The Legislature granted the privileges Barker asked. A few years later (1826) the sequel to this legislative favoritism appeared in the form of one of the most sensational trials witnessed in early New York.

¹ Hammond, I : 450.

The year 1818 saw Tammany Hall in the unusual position of advocating a protective tariff. The War of 1812 having injured domestic manufacturing, the demand for such a measure was general. Party asperity had softened, and Republicans, or Democrats—as they were coming to be known—and Federalists alike favored it. The society made the best of this popular wave. It issued an address, advising moderate protective duties on foreign goods. But New York then, and until after the Civil War, was a great shipbuilding centre; and the shipbuilders and owners and the importing merchants soon influenced Tammany to revert to the stanch advocacy of free trade.

Tammany Corruption Charged.

The almost complete extinction of national party lines under Monroe caused the disappearance of violent partisan recriminations and brought municipal affairs more to public attention. From 1817 onward public bodies agitated much more forcibly and persistently than before for the correction of certain local evils. Chief among these were the high taxes. In 1817 the city tax levy was $180,000; in 1818 it rose to $250,000, "an enormous amount," one newspaper said. Though the city received annually $200,000 in rents from houses and lots, for wharves, slips and piers, and also a considerable amount from fines, yet there was a constantly increasing deficit. The city expenses were thought to be too slight to devour the ordinary revenue. The Democratic, or Tammany, officials made attempts to explain that much of the debt was contracted under Federalist Common Councils, and said that sufficient money must be provided or "the poor would starve."

At almost the identical time this plea was entered, E. C. Genet was laying before the Grand Jury a statement to this effect: that although it was known that the aggregate capital of the incorporated banks, insurance and commission companies in New York City, exclusive of one branch of the United States Bank, amounted in 1817 to about $22,000,000, in addition to the shares in those companies, yet the city and State taxes combined "on all that vast personal estate in New York City are only a paltry $97,000."

The explanation of the blindness of the Wigwam officials to the escape of the rich from taxation is simple. The Tammany Hall of 1818 was not the Tammany Hall of 1800. In that interval the poor young men who once had to club together in order to vote had become directors in banking, insurance and various other corporations, which as members of the Legislature or as city officials they themselves had helped to form. Being such, they exerted all the influence of their political machinery to save their property from taxation. From about 1805 to 1837 Tammany Hall was ruled directly by about one-third bankers, one-third merchants and the remaining third politicians of various pursuits. The masses formed—except at rare times—the easily wielded body. The leaders safeguarded their own interests at every point, however they might profess at election times an abhorrence of the aristocracy; and the Grand Jury being of them, ignored Genet's complaint.

More Disclosures.

A new series of revelations concerning the conduct of Tammany chieftains was made public during 1817-18. Ruggles Hubbard, a one-time Sachem and at the time Sheriff of the county, absconded from the city August 15, 1817, leaving a gap in the treasury.¹ John L. Broome, another Sachem, was shortly after removed from the office of City Clerk by the Council of Appointment for having neglected to take the necessary securities from Hubbard. John P. Haff, a one-time Grand Sachem and long a power in the organization, was removed by President Monroe on November 14, 1818, from the office of Surveyor of the Port, for corruption and general unfitness.¹

¹ In what year Hubbard was Sachem is uncertain. His name is included in Horton's list. He was one of the chiefs in the nominating committee from 1815 to 1817. It is worthy of note that only a short time before his flight a committee of the Common Council had examined his accounts and approved them as correct.

But the most sensational of these exposures was that concerning the swindling of the Medical Science Lottery, by which Naphthali Judah² and others profited handsomely. The testimony brought out before Mayor Colden, November 10, 1818, showed that a corrupt understanding existed between Judah and one of the lottery's managers, by which the former was enabled to have a knowledge of the state of the wheel. No less than $100,000 was drawn on the first day, of which Judah received a large share. Further affidavits were submitted tending to show a corrupt understanding between Judah and Alderman Isaac Denniston in the drawing of the Owego Lottery, by which Denniston won $35,000. John L. Broome was also implicated in the scandal, and Teunis Wortman, while not directly concerned in it, was considered involved by the public, and suffered a complete loss of popular favor,³ though retaining for some time a certain degree of influence in the society and organization.

¹ That Haff was removed is certain, though the author has been unable to find a record of the fact in the available papers of the Treasury Department. The Tammany organ, the National Advocate, November 19, 1818, commented as follows: "The rumors which, for several days past, have been afloat and which we treated as idle and interested, are confirmed—Captain Haff has been removed from office." Many evidences of public gratification were shown. In one instance, eighty citizens dragged a field piece from the Arsenal to the Battery and fired a salute.

² Naphthali Judah had been Sachem of the Maryland tribe in 1808, and continued for some time to be a leader in the party's councils. He was again elected a Sachem in 1819.

³ How deeply the people of New York were concerned in lotteries may be gathered from the fact that in 1826 there were 190 lottery offices legalized by statute in New York City.

The Wigwam Banquets Jackson.

Always as popular criticism began to assert itself, Tammany would make a sudden display of patriotism, accompanied by the pronouncement of high-sounding toasts and other exalted utterances. Such it did in 1817, when the society took part in the interment of the remains of Gen. Montgomery in St. Paul's Church. And now the Sachems prepared to entertain Andrew Jackson at a banquet, and also indirectly signify that he was their choice for President. William Mooney, again elected Grand Sachem, sent to Gen. Jackson, under date of February 15, 1819, a grandiloquent letter of invitation which, referring to the battle of New Orleans, said in part:

"Columbia's voice, in peals of iron thunder, proclaimed the dread fiat of that eventful morn! Terra was drenched with human gore! The perturbed elements were hushed! Mars and Bellona retired from the ensanguined field! and godlike Hera resumed her gentle reign. * * * We approbate your noble deeds and greet you hero. Scourge of British insolence, Spanish perfidy and Indian cruelty—these, sir, are the sentiments of the Sons of Liberty in New York who compose the National Institution of Tammany Society (No. 1 of the United States). Here, sir, we guard the patriot flame—'preserved by concord'—its effulgence, in a blaze of glory,

A saying obtained that "one-half the citizens got their living by affording the opportunity of gambling to the rest." Many State institutions were in part supported from the proceeds of the lotteries. These swindles, therefore, became a matter for legislative investigation. A great number of pages of the Journal of the Assembly for 1819 are taken up with the testimony.

shall surround and accompany you to the temple of interminable fame and honor."

Jackson accepted the invitation. Cadwallader D. Colden, who had been re-appointed Mayor a few days before, was asked to preside. When, on February 23, the banquet was held and Jackson was called for his toast, Colden arose, and to the consternation of the Tammany men proposed: "De Witt Clinton, the Governor of the great and patriotic State of New York." This surprising move made it appear that Jackson favored the Clinton party. To counteract the impression, the General instantly left the room, "amidst reiterated applauses," and a dead silence ensued for three minutes. This incident, it may well be believed, did not dampen the society's enthusiasm for Jackson; it continued to champion him ardently.

Wigwam Reduces Salaries of Clintonites.

Colden was re-appointed Mayor for the third time in February, 1820. Municipal issues were dividing the public consideration with Tammany's renewed efforts to overthrow Clinton. The report of the Common Council Finance Committee, January 10, 1820, showed that the city would soon be $1,300,000 in debt. An attempt was made to show how the money had been spent on the new City Hall and Bellevue Hospital, but it proved nothing. Although the law expressly prohibited Aldermen from being directly or indirectly interested in any contract or job, violations were common. It was alleged that streets were sunk, raised and sunk again, to enable the contractors to make large claims against the city. To soothe public clamor, the Aldermen made a show of reducing city expenses. The salary of Colden—he being a Clintonite—was reduced $2,500, and the pay of various other city officers was cut down. The salaries of the Wigwam men were not interfered with.

Clinton Again Defeats Tammany.

The wholesome criticism of municipal affairs was soon obscured again by the reviving tumult of the contest between Tammany and Clinton. The Governor stood for re-election against Daniel D. Tompkins in April, 1820. Tompkins had long been the idol of the Tammany men and for a time was one of the society's Sachems. In 1818 he had been practically charged with being a public defaulter. State Controller Archibald M'Intyre submitted to the Legislature a mass of his vouchers, public and private (for the time Tompkins was Governor), which showed a balance against him of $197,297.64. In this balance, however, was included the sum of $142,763.60 which was not allowed to Tompkins's credit because the vouchers were insufficient. Allowing Tompkins this amount, the balance against him was $54,534.04. Tompkins, on the other hand, claimed the State owed him $120,000. His partisans in the Senate in 1819 passed a bill to re-imburse him, but it was voted down in the Assembly.¹

The statements of both sides during the campaign of 1820 were filled with epithets and strings of accusations. Tammany contrasted Clinton's alleged going over to the British with Tompkins's patriotism in the War of 1812. Party lines were broken down, and Federalists and Tammany men acted together, as they had done the year before (1819), when their Legislative ticket won over the Clintonites by 2,500 majority. The Clintonites were tauntingly invited to visit the Wigwam, because in that "stronghold of Democracy would be found no 'Swiss' Federalism, no British partisan, no opponents of the late war, no bribers or bribed for bank charters, no trimming politicians, no lobby members or legislative brokers." In Tammany Hall they would see a body of independent yeomen, of steady and unerring Republicans and men who rallied around their country in the hour of danger.¹

¹ Journal of the Assembly, 1819: 222-45, and Ibid., 1046-53. Tompkins, now Vice-president, made this race for "vindication."

While Clinton's adherents in New York City on election day were inactive, his opponents, ever on the lookout, carried the city by 675 majority. The popularity of the Erie Canal, however, which was fast nearing completion, carried the rest of the State for Clinton.* "Heads up! tails down," shouted the exuberant, successful Clintonites some days after, pointing to the disappointed, discomfited Bucktails. For Tammany had been so sure of Tompkins's election that it had procured, at considerable expense, a painting of him which was to be exhibited in the hall when the news of his election should arrive. By way of consolation the Sachems drank to this toast at their anniversary on May 12:

"De Witt Clinton, our lean Governor—
———May he never get fat,
While he wears two faces under one hat."

¹ National Advocate, March 29, 1820.

* Tammany charged that in the construction of the Erie Canal, land had been cut up in slips to make additional voters for Clinton and cited the county of Genessee, which, though polling but 750 freehold votes in 1815, gave nearly 5,000 votes in this election.

CHAPTER VII.

THE SUFFRAGE CONTEST.

1820-1822.

Tammany Hall now entered upon a step destined to change its composition and career, and greatly affect the political course of the State and nation.

From its inception the society had declared among its objects the accomplishment of two special reforms—the securing of manhood suffrage and the abolition of the law for the imprisonment of debtors. No steps so far had been taken by either the organization or the society toward the promotion of these reforms; first, because the leaders were engaged too busily in the contest for office, and second, because Tammany Hall, though professing itself devoted to the welfare of the poor, was, to repeat, essentially a middle-class institution. Having property themselves, the men who controlled and influenced the organization were well satisfied with the laws under which Tammany had grown powerful and they rich; they could not see why so blissful a state of affairs should be changed for something the outcome of which was doubtful. The farmer, the independent blacksmith, the shoemaker with an apprentice or two, the grocer—these had votes, and though they looked with envy on the aristocratic class above them, yet they were not willing that the man with the spade should be placed on a political equality with themselves. In addition, most of the aristocratic rich were opposed to these reforms, and the Tammany leaders were either ambitious to enter that class or desirous of not estranging it. Lastly, the lower classes had sided with Clinton generally; they regarded him as their best friend; to place the ballot unrestrictedly in their hands, Tammany Hall reckoned, would be fatuous. As to the debtors' law, the tradesmen that thronged Tammany were only too well satisfied with a statute that allowed them to throw their debtors, no matter for how small an amount, into jail indefinitely.

Tammany Forced to Join the Movement.

Agitation for these two reforms, begun by a few radicals, gradually made headway with the public. The demand for manhood suffrage made the greater progress, until in 1820 it overshadowed all other questions. The movement took on such force and popularity that Tammany Hall was forced, for its own preservation, to join. Agreeable to instructions, the National Advocate, September 13, 1820, began to urge the extension of the right of suffrage and the abolition of those cumbersome relics of old centralizing methods, the Council of Appointment and the Council of Revision—the latter a body passing finally on all laws enacted by the Legislature. On October 7, a meeting of Democrats from all parts of the State was held in the Wigwam, Stephen Allen presiding, and the Legislature was called upon to provide for a constitutional convention for the adoption of the amendments.

The Wealthy Classes Oppose It.

The aristocracy and all the powers at its command assailed the proposed reforms with passionate bitterness,

"Would you admit the populace, the patroon's coachman to vote?" asked one Federalist writer. "His excellency (the Governor) cannot retain the gentry, the Judges, and the 'manors' in his interest without he opposes either openly or clandestinely every attempt to enlarge the elective franchise." "We would rather be ruled by a man without an estate than by an estate without a man," replied one reform writer. The Legislature passed a bill providing for the holding of a constitutional convention, and the Council of Revision, by the deciding vote of Clinton, promptly rejected it. Doubtless this action was due to the declared intention of the advocates of the constitutional convention to abolish this body. Again an assemblage gathered at Tammany Hall (December 1) and resolved that as the "distinction of the electoral rights, the mode of appointment to office and the union of the judiciary and legislative functions were objectional and highly pernicious," the next Legislature should pass the pending bill.

Upon this issue a Legislature overwhelmingly favorable to the extension of suffrage and other projected reforms was elected. The aristocratic party opened a still fiercer onslaught. But when the Legislature re-passed the convention bill, the Council of Revision did not dare to veto it. The convention bill was promptly submitted to the people and ratified. On the news of its success the Democratic voters celebrated the event in the Wigwam, June 14, 1821.

The Victory.

Beaten so far, the Federalists tried to form a union with the reactionary element in Tammany Hall by which they could elect delegates opposed to the projected reforms. All opposition was unavailing, however; the reformers had a clear majority in the convention, and the new amendments, embodying the reforms, were submitted to the people. They were adopted in January, 1822, the city alone giving them 4608 majority.¹ When the Legislature took oath under the revised constitution on March 4, the bells of the city churches were rung; flags were flung on the shipping and public buildings; "a grand salute" was fired by a corps of artillery from the Battery; the City Hall was illuminated at night, and the municipality held a popular reception there. In Tammany Hall a gala banquet was spread, one toast of which ran: "The right of suffrage—Corruption in its exercise most to be apprehended from its limitation to a few." After that pronouncement, so edifying in view of later developments, came another as instructive: "The young and rising politician—May integrity and principle guide him—studying the public good, not popularity."

So Tammany Hall built for itself a vast political following, which soon made it practically invincible.

¹ A considerable increase in the number of voters was made by the suffrage reform. The last remnant of the property qualification was abolished in the State in 1826 by a vote of 104,900 to 3,901.

The abolition of the Council of Appointment carried with it a clause vesting the Appointment of the Mayor in the Common Council. It was not until 1834 that the Mayor was elected by the people. At the same time the gubernatorial term was changed to two years and the election time to November.

CHAPTER VIII.

STRUGGLES OF THE PRESIDENTIAL FACTIONS.

1822-1825.

Inevitably the greater part of the newly created voters gravitated to Tammany Hall, but they did not instantly overrun and rule it.

A new set of leaders came in view. Wortman and Judah had been forced from public life through the lottery exposures of 1818, and Broome had lost prestige. Hubbard had fled; Haff, Buckmaster, Strong and Prince were no longer powerful, and Jonas Humbert, who until 1820 had been a person of some authority, was now no longer in public notice. Stephen Allen and Mordecai M. Noah, with a following of some of the old Burrites, were now regarded as being at the helm.

The pro-Tammany Council of Appointment chosen late in 1820, before the new constitutional amendments were adopted, had removed Colden and appointed Allen (Grand Sachem about this time) Mayor¹ in his place. Noah was made Sheriff, and all the other offices were filled with Wigwam men.

The new voting element coming into the organization had to be impressed with the traditional principle of discipline. Otherwise there might be all kinds of nominations, whose effect upon the machine-made "regular" nominations of the organization would be disastrous, if not destructive. To this end the different ward committees passed resolutions (April 27 and 28, 1822) declaring in nearly identical terms that the sense of a majority, fairly expressed, ought always to govern, and that no party, however actuated by principle, could be truly useful without organization. "Therefore, that the discipline of the Republican party, as established and practised for the last twenty-five years, has, by experience, been found conducive to the general good and success of the party."¹

¹ The first election for Mayor by the Common Council, under the new constitution, resulted in the choice of William Paulding, Jr. (1823-25).

Two "Regular" Tickets.

In 1822 Clinton declined to stand for re-election. Tammany Hall was considered so invincible in the city that the Clintonites and the remnant of the Federalists refused to nominate contesting candidates for Congress and the Legislature. Experience demonstrating that almost all the voters cast their ballots for the "regular" ticket without asking questions, competition for a place on that ticket, which now was equivalent to election, became sharp. When, on October 30, the nominating committee reported the name of M. M. Noah for the office of Sheriff, Benjamin Romaine moved to have that of Peter H. Wendover substituted. Two factors were at work here; one was religious prejudice against Noah, who was a Jew; the other and greater, was the struggle between the partisans of Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams and William H. Crawford to get control of Tammany Hall, as a necessary preliminary to the efforts of each for the nomination for President.¹ Romaine was an Adams supporter and could easily have nominated a ticket independent of Tammany Hall, but it would have lacked "regularity," and hence popular support. A row ensued; and while Noah's party rushed out of Tammany Hall claiming the "regular" nomination, the other faction, by the light of a solitary candle, passed resolutions denouncing Noah and claiming that Wendover was the "regular" nominee.

¹ Advertisements of the ward committees in the National Advocate, April 29, 1822.

Each of the candidates put himself before the people, declaring that a majority of the nominating committee favored him as "regular." The leaders of the organization inclined to Noah, as one of its heads, but Wendover skillfully appealed to Anti-Semitic bigotry and gathered a large following. The Sachems dared not interfere between them, and each in consequence had a room in Tammany Hall, where his tickets were distributed and his agents made their headquarters. Noah was defeated at the polls; but his defeat did not impair his influence in Tammany Hall. He was a person of singular ability. A facile writer and effective manipulator, he maintained his hold.

"Regularity," then, was the agency by which the leaders imposed their candidates upon the thousands of voters who, from their stores and benches, offices and farms, went to the polls to deposit a list of names prepared for them. The voters were expected only to vote; the leaders assumed the burden of determining for whom the voting should be done. An instance of the general recognition of this fact was given in 1820 when the counties of Suffolk, Queens, Kings and Dutchess voted to discontinue the practice of holding Senatorial conventions in Tammany Hall because a fair expression of the wishes of a great proportion of the Democratic-Republican electors was not obtainable there. At the same time, and for years later, complaints were frequent that the ward meetings had long since become an object of so little interest that they were nearly neglected; and that a small knot of six or eight men managed them for their own purposes.

¹ It is a convincing commentary on the absolute disruption of party lines at this epoch that a contest could arise in such an organization as Tammany Hall between supporters of men of such diverse political beliefs as Andrew Jackson and John Quincy Adams.

Adams and Jackson Factions Fight.

In 1823 attempts were made by different factions to obtain the invaluable "regular" nominations. Seemingly a local election, the real point turned on whether partisans of Jackson, Adams or Crawford should be chosen. Upon this question Tammany Hall was still divided. The nominating committee, however, was for Jackson. The voters were bidden to assemble in the hall at 7 o'clock on the evening of October 30 to hear that committee's report. When they tried to enter, they found the hall occupied by the committee and its friends. This was a new departure in Tammany practices. Since the building of the hall the nominating committee had always waited in a lower room for the opening of the great popular meeting, and had then marched up stairs and reported. To head off expected hostile action by the Adams men, the committee this time started proceedings before the appointed hour. The names of its candidates were called and affirmed in haste. Gen. Robert Swartwout, a corrupt but skillful politician and an Adams supporter, proposed a substitute list of names, upon which the chairman declared that the meeting stood adjourned. A general fistfight followed, in the excitement of which Swartwout took the chair, read off a list of names and declared it adopted. Epithets, among which "liar" and "traitor" figured most, were distributed freely. Both tickets went to the people under the claim of "regularity," and each carried five of the ten wards.

Calhoun Men Elect Grand Sachem.

Though Robert Swartwout¹ was for Adams, another Swartwout (Samuel), an even shrewder politician, was Jackson's direct representative in the task of securing the organization's support for President. A third and less important group were the Crawford advocates. They were led by Gen. John P. Van Ness, an adroit intriguer and one of the old Burr chieftains of Tammany. In 1821 Adams, then Secretary of State, ascertaining that Van Ness, as president of the Bank of the Metropolis, was indebted to that institution to the amount of $60,000 and that its affairs were in bad condition, ¹When United States Navy Agent in 1820, Robert Swartwout became indebted to the Government in the sum of $68,000, a defalcation he could not make good. The Government took a mortgage on his property for $75,000. This and political influence saved him from prison. It was because of Adams's efforts in his behalf that his extraordinary devotion to the sixth President was credited. Tammany Hall, considerate of human infirmity, continued him in full favor as a leader. These facts were brought out in the suit of the United States Government against Francis H. Nicholl, one of Robert Swartwout's sureties, before Judge Van Ness in the United States District Court, April 8, 1824.

transferred the account of the State Department to another bank. From that time Van Ness bore deep hatred against Adams and supported Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury, for President. Crawford had deposited as a standing balance with Van Ness about the same sum Adams had withdrawn, notwithstanding the bank's suspicious character. The Crawford men went first about the business of obtaining complete ascendancy in the Tammany Society. With that end in view they tried in 1823 to elect a Grand Sachem favoring Crawford. The old Burr faction now brought forth a Presidential candidate of its own in the person of John C. Calhoun, and taking advantage of the absence of most of the society's members, dexterously managed to elect William Todd, a partisan of Calhoun, Grand Sachem.

The popular voice for Jackson becoming daily stronger, some of the Adams leaders changed about. Perhaps having a premonition that Adams would be chosen President by the House of Representatives, the general committee of Tammany Hall, on October 3, 1823, resolved that the election of President by that branch of Congress was "an event to be deprecated," and that the constitution ought to be so amended as to give the election directly to the people without the intervention of electors. The ward committees passed similar resolutions. This action was on a line with that of a few years before when the Wigwam, fearing the nomination of Clinton for Governor by legislative caucus, recommended that State nominations be made by a State convention of delegates. In the following April (1824) Jackson's friends filled Tammany Hall and nominated him for President.

Wigwam Again Strikes at Clinton.

Before the election came on, however, the organization, in the full swing of power, again brought public odium upon itself. De Witt Clinton, having filled his gubernatorial term, was now serving in the modest post of a Canal Commissioner, without pay and utterly without political power. Yet Tammany carried its hatred of him so far as to cause the Legislature to remove him (April 12, 1824), despite the protests of a few of its more sagacious members.¹

Naturally, this petty act caused an immediate and strong reaction in a community endeared to Clinton by that splendid creation of his energy—the Erie Canal. No sooner did the news reach New York City than 10,000 persons held an indignation meeting in the City Hall Park and in front of Tammany Hall. Throughout the State similar meetings were held. In spite of the politicians, the cyclonic popular movement forced Clinton to be again a candidate for Governor.

Tammany Hall as a Federal Court-Room.

The chiefs regretted their folly. At the same time they were subjected to public criticism in another direction. One of them, William P. Van Ness, Burr's companion at the Hamilton duel, a Judge of the United States District Court, took it upon himself to select Tammany Hall permanently for a court-room, his object being to have the Government pay rent to the Tammany Society. His colleague, Judge Thompson, a more scrupulous man, indignantly asked why the courts were not to be held in the City Hall, as usual. Judge Van

¹ Journal of the Senate, 1824: 409.

Ness defiantly held court in Tammany Hall, Judge Thompson going to the City Hall. Public disgust asserting itself, an investigation was set afoot. Van Ness tried to throw the blame on his marshal. But this officer, as was conclusively shown, acted under written instructions from Van Ness in refusing to consider any other place than Tammany Hall, and he agreed to pay to the society $1,500 a year rent. The lease, which was made under the plea that no room was available in the City Hall, contained a stipulation that not only should the tavern be allowed in Tammany Hall but that the court-room should be used, when required, as the meeting place of the society or of the political conventions. The citizens assembled in the wards and denounced the proceeding. The Aldermen decided to shift the responsibility which Van Ness attempted to place upon them. Their committee reported (October 24, 1824),¹ that the City Hall always had been and would be at the service of the United States Court Judges, and that a room had been set apart especially for their use. Judge Van Ness was forced to return to the City Hall to hold court.²

Tactics of the Campaign.

Tammany now had recourse to its customary devices in endeavoring to bring out its usual vote in the coming election. The general committee announced that at no period in the last twenty years had the welfare and perpetuity of the party more imperiously required a rigid adherence to ancient usages and discipline. This was meant to play on the partisan emotions of the Democrats. It was likewise a threat to punish any man of independent views who disobeyed the orders of the general committee. Such summary, veiled notifications of the general committee were seldom disregarded by those who profited or expected to profit by politics. After toasting their "squaws and papooses" on July 4 the society impressively made this toast: "May regular nominations ever prevail"—a thrust at the method of Clinton's nomination and a warning for the future guidance of all Tammany men.

¹ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 52: 75-78.

² During this agitation Jacob Barker, Judge Van Ness and M. M. Noah repeatedly presented, in the public prints, arguments in favor of using Tammany Hall as a court-room. We shall have need to refer to Barker again on another page.

Tammany further attempted to counteract the impetus of the Clinton movement by touching at length upon its own patriotism in the past and by stirring up class hatreds. On the vital issues the Wigwam was silent; but in another long fulmination it recalled the "sins" and "treason" of Clinton against the Democratic party. "He is haughty in his manners," it went on, "and a friend of the aristocracy—cold and distant to all who cannot boast of wealth and family distinctions and selfish in all the ends he aims at."

Clinton and Jackson Win.

The partisans of Jackson carried the city. Presidential electors were still selected by the Legislature, and it is therefore impossible to determine Jackson's vote. A fusion between the Clintonites and the People's party caused the defeat of most of Tammany's Assembly candidates, but the victors were Jackson men, and Clinton himself had declared for Old Hickory. The full Jackson strength was shown in the vote for the three Tammany candidates for Congress, who were elected.

Clinton's victory was sweeping. The near completion of the Erie Canal, for which he had labored so zealously and which Tammany had opposed so pertinaciously, made him the idol of the people, and he was again elected Governor, carrying even New York City by 1,031 majority. That eye was blind which could not see in the opening of the canal the incalculable benefits Clinton had estimated from the first. This great work secured as a virtual gift to New York City the inland commerce of the vast empire west of the mountains, no rival being able to contend for it. The trade of the canal almost immediately increased the city's business $60,000,000 annually, and year by year the amount grew. Along its course a hundred new and thrifty villages sprang into existence, and the State's wealth and population went upward by leaps and bounds.

Contrast between Clinton and the Sachems.

Compared with this illustrious achievement, a summary of the record of Clinton's antagonists, the Tammany leaders, makes but a poor showing. Contributing to the development of democracy, for the most part, only so far as it benefited themselves; declining to take up even the question of manhood suffrage until forced to, they did little or nothing, even in the closer domain of the city, for the good of their own time or of posterity. In the years when Clinton was engaged in projecting and building the canal, they were too busy wrangling over offices or cribbing at the public treasury to improve city conditions. The streets were an abomination of filth. The local authorities long refused, despite public pressure, to take steps to have the city furnished with pure water. As a result of the bad water of a private corporation and the uncleanness of the streets, yellow fever and cholera had several times devastated the city, and in one year (1822) it was so deserted that grass grew in the streets. To make up for municipal deficits the city fathers continued selling the public land, that might have been made into parks or retained for future uses, buying it in as individuals. Between 1813 and 1819, according to the admission of the Tammany organ in the latter year, $440,347 worth of land, whose present value probably amounts to tens of millions of dollars, was thus fraudulently disposed of.¹ In a word, their records, public and private, furnish an extreme contrast to the record of Clinton, who, while a politician when need be, gave his years and his talents to the completion of a public work of the greatest utility and importance.

¹ For a part of this time, it should be stated, the Federalists were in power.

CHAPTER IX.

THE JACKSON ELEMENT VICTORIOUS.

1825-1828.

Factional strife had not entirely smothered the demand for improvement in the city government.¹ The arbitrary powers of the Common Council, composed, as it was, of one Board in which sat both Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, excited general dissatisfaction. Having the power of making assessments, ordering public improvements, and disposing of the public property at will, the Aldermen made no detailed account of their expenditures. One writer advised the Aldermen to curtail some of their own extravagances: "Why not stop," he wrote,

"in their career of eating the most unreasonable and costly suppers every time they meet on public business and drinking such wines as they never in the course of their lives tasted before; choice wines that cost $40 a dozen? O! but I will soon tell a tale that will make our citizens stare. I understand that our city expenses are now nearly $2,000 a day."

The State constitution of 1821-22 had granted the Common Council greater powers than before in vacating and filling important offices in the city. In 1823 the city debt was rising, and though the Common Council professed to attempt retrenchment, no real effort was made, the fathers being loth to give over the voting of pretended improvements out of which they benefited as individual contractors. The agitation continuing, the Legislature, in April, 1824, had passed a law to "erect" two separate chambers—a Board of Aldermen to be elected from among the freeholders for two years, and a Board of Assistants for one year, with concurrent powers. The opponents of the new branch termed it derisively the "House of Lords" and denounced its aristocratic nature. The amendment was defeated by the radicals in June, though the interest in it was slight. Over 8,000 electors failed to vote.

¹ William Paulding was succeeded by Philip Hone (1825-26), who in turn was followed by Paulding (1826-29).

Other schemes for municipal reform dissolved in talk, and by the Spring of 1825 public attention became concentrated again on the matter of Jackson's candidacy for the office of President. Barely had John Quincy Adams been inaugurated when Tammany set about to make Jackson his successor. On May 12 Sachem Nicholas Schureman, at the anniversary celebration of the society, gave this toast: "Jackson, the Hero of New Orleans, our next President." Again, on July 4, the principal toast was to Jackson.¹

More Disclosures.

The Jackson campaign went energetically on. But it was rudely interrupted during the following Autumn by a fresh series of revelations regarding certain Tammany chieftains. The legislative favoritism by which Jacob Barker was enabled to secure advantages for his Exchange Bank (1818)² now culminated in a grave public scandal. In September, 1826, Barker, Henry Eckford, another of the line of Sachems; Matthew L. Davis, lately Grand Sachem, and several other accomplices were principals in one of the most extended and sensational trials which the city had known. They stood charged with swindles aggregating several million dollars. The Grand Jury's indictment of September 15 charged them, and also Mark Spencer, William P. Rathbone, Thomas Vermilyea and others, with defrauding the Mechanics' Fire Insurance Company of 1,000 shares of its own capital stock, 1,000 shares of United States Bank stock and $50,000; the Fulton Bank of 2,000 shares of its own capital stock and $50,000; the Tradesmen's Bank of 2,000 shares of its own capital stock and $50,000; the Morris Canal and Banking Company of 2,000 shares of its own capital stock and $50,000; and the Life and Fire Insurance Company of 2,000 shares of its own capital stock. The indictment further charged these men with obtaining fraudulently 1,000 promissory notes for the amount of nearly $100 each, belonging to the Fulton Bank; and the same number of notes for similar sums belonging respectively to the Tradesmen's Bank, the Morris Canal and Banking Company, and the Life and Fire Insurance Company, and with additionally obtaining by fraud the sum of $50,000, the property of Henry Barclay, George Barclay and others.¹

¹ This anniversary was the first on which the society, since its formation, did not march in the streets and go to church. Each "brother," wearing a bucktail in front of his hat, went instead to the great council chamber, where the Declaration of Independence was read by Matthew L. Davis.

² See Chapter vi.

A disagreement of the jury marked the first trial; the second brought a conviction of the prisoners. Tammany Hall was unwilling to see any of its leaders go to prison. As soon as the storm of popular indignation blew over, a new trial was had for Davis, and owing to strong political influence his acquittal was the outcome. Barker was again convicted, but, thanks to the discreet use of his money, never saw a cell. He went South and lived on till over ninety years of age.¹ Eckford fled to the Orient and died in Syria. The severity of the law fell on the minor offenders, two of whom, Mowatt and Hyatt, went to prison for two years, and the Lambert brothers for one year.

¹ Minutes of the Oyer and Terminer, 6: 3-137.

Van Buren Turns the Tide.

The trial over, public interest again centred on the Presidential struggle. Alive to the necessity of winning Tammany to his interest, President Adams chose most of his New York appointees from its organization, thereby creating in that body an alert clique of devoted partisans. If the leaders had been able to direct the organization absolutely, Adams might have bribed nearly all of them with offices, favors or promises, but there were other deciding factors. The first was the mass of the Democrats who favored Jackson and forced most of the leaders to his support. The second was the organizing genius of Martin Van Buren. He was a member of the Tammany Society, and in September, 1827, he visited New York to compose the discord in the general committee, which was divided equally on the question of the Presidency, although in the society itself a majority was for Jackson. The Jackson men quickly gained predominant influence. On September 27 the general committee recommended in a public address to its ¹ Barker maintained that a conspiracy had been formed against him. A pamphlet entitled, "Jacob Barker's Letters Developing the Conspiracy Formed in 1826 for His Ruin," was extensively circulated about this time or later.

"fellow-citizens" that when they met in their wards, they should elect such citizens only, to represent them in their different committees, as were favorable to Jackson. The Adams men were enraged.¹ Col. James Fairlie, a veteran of the Revolution; Benjamin Romaine, Peter Sharpe, William Todd, W. H. Ireland, Abraham Stagg, Peter Stagg and John L. Lawrence, known as "the elite" of Tammany Hall, and others, denounced this action. "Was such a power of proscription and dictation ever delegated to or practiced by any other general committee?" they asked in an address.

The ward primary elections on the night of October 3 were tumultuous. The Jackson men took possession of the meeting rooms, installed their own chairmen and passed resolutions, without allowing the Adams supporters a chance to be heard. Both factions then alternately held meetings in Tammany Hall. So determined was the struggle to get possession of the Wigwam that the Adams men contrived to expel their opponents from it for one day, and the Jackson men had to make their nominations in the cellar called "the Coal Hole." At a later meeting of the Adams faction, embracing a group of old Federalists, Col. Marinus Willett, a venerable Revolutionary patriot, who presided, spoke of "the danger and absurdity of confiding the destinies of the country to a mere arbitrary soldier." The meeting passed resolutions denouncing the general committee majority and reiterating its support of Adams. The Jackson men rallied to the Wigwam in force and approved the ticket nominated in "the Coal Hole." The nominees were for local offices and were themselves of no particular importance. The great question was whether New York City favored Jackson or Adams, and the coming election was the accepted test.

¹ The action of the general committee had a sweeping national importance. "The State of New York represents the Democracy of the Union; the City of New York gives tone to the State; the General Committee govern the City." Quoted by "A Journalist" as applying to these years in his "Memoirs of James Gordon Bennett and His Times," New York, 1855.

Jackson Faction Wins.

The Jackson men made desperate efforts to carry the city. Now were observable the effects brought about by the suffrage changes of 1822 and 1826. The formerly disinherited class had become attached to Tammany Hall, and the organization, entirely reversing its exclusive native policy, declared for a reduction of the five-year naturalization period. From that time forth the patronage of aliens became a settled policy of Tammany. In this election these aliens exercised a powerful influence, materially aiding Jackson.

Cases of fraud and violence had hitherto been frequent; but nothing like the exhibition at the primaries and polls in November, 1827, had ever been known. Cart-loads of voters, many of whom had been in the country less than three years, were used as repeaters in the different wards. An instance was known of one cart-load of six men voting at six different places. Other men boasted of having voted three and four times. In an upper ward, where the foreign population had full sway, an American found it almost impossible to appear or vote at all. If he tried the experiment, he was arrested immediately, his votes were taken from him and Jackson votes put in his hands. Many of the polling places had no challengers, and most of the inspectors did duty for the Jackson ticket by a display of stout hickory branches. By such means the Jackson men rolled up in the city a majority of nearly five thousand.

Reflective citizens of both parties were alarmed and humiliated by the events of the election. The public conscience was not used to the indiscriminate stuffing of ballot boxes. To the revelations of this election can be traced the origin of the Native American party, whose cry that "political privileges should belong exclusively to the natives of the country" even now was heard.

Sachems Shut Out Adams Men.

Though a year before the time for choosing a President, the result of this election strongly indicated the choice of Jackson and caused great exultation and encouragement among his supporters in other cities. In the Winter of 1827, Tammany sent a delegation to visit him at New Orleans, ostensibly to present an address on the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, but in reality, it was supposed, to confer with him on the work to be done in his behalf. By the beginning of 1828 the organization was controlled wholly by Jackson men. Not a nomination, however petty, was made of a man not known to be his partisan. The great body of Democrats approved this course on the ground that Jackson's election was the real issue, and that local issues were subordinate for the time. When the Adams men tried to hold anti-Jackson meetings in the Wigwam, the Sachems stepped forward and exercised a long dormant power—a power which explains the real connection between the society and the organization, and which it frequently used later against hostile factions. Through pressure, the lessee of Tammany Hall sold to the society his lease. This secured, the society put in charge of the building (which was fitted in part as a hotel as well as a hall) another person, instructed not to let any room to the Adams committee. The Adams men asked by what right a "charitable and benevolent society" interfered in politics. But, being excluded, they could no longer claim they represented Tammany Hall—a fatal loss to them and an important advantage to the Jackson men, who now were the only Tammany organization. The Adams committees were thus shut off from holding any meetings in the hall.

Large Majority for Jackson Electors.

With the Adams committees put out, the Jackson men began to quarrel among themselves for local and State nominations. The Wigwam's inveterate foe, De Witt Clinton, was out of the way, he having died on February 11, 1828, while still Governor. As nominations continued to be looked upon as almost certainly resulting in election, there was a swarm of candidates.¹ The ambitions of few of these were gratified. The nominations were settled beforehand by a small clique, headed, it was said, by M. M. Noah.

¹ "Should the Independent electors," wrote one of them, Aaron Sergeant, "give me a nomination (for Sheriff) (as there will be several candidates for the office) I shall succeed by a handsome majority. The Sons of Erin are my most particular friends. I rely with confidence on their support.

"Knowing the office to be one worth $10,000 per annum, should I be elected, I shall give one-third of the income of this office to be divided equally to [among] the several charitable Religious Societies in the city. My claims for the office are, that I am a citizen born, and my father one of the Patriots of the Revolution for seven long years * * * *."

Of a voting population of 25,000, Tammany Hall secured a majority of 5,831 for Jackson ¹ and elected all its candidates except one. That hundreds, if not thousands, of illegal votes were counted was admitted. Boys of 19 and 20 years of age voted and were employed to electioneer for the Jackson ticket. On the other hand, raftsmen just arrived from the interior and men who had no homes were gathered in bunches and sent to swell the Adams vote, though it is doubtful whether their votes were counted. For the first time in city elections money was used to influence voting.

The Common Council soon after removed every officeholder not of the Jackson faith. As a matter of course, Jackson rewarded his friends. He made Samuel Swartwout Collector of the Port and filled every Federal local post with his Tammany adherents.

¹ This was the first election in the State in which Presidential electors were voted on by the people.

CHAPTER X.

THE WORKINGMEN'S PARTY.

1829-1830.

In 1829 the indignation against the Tammany leaders crystallized in a "purifying" movement. Under the direction of its banker, merchant and lawyer leaders, Tammany Hall had been made a medium for either coercing or bribing the Legislature or the Common Council into passing dozens of bank charters and franchises with scarcely any provision for compensation to either State or city.¹ In 1819 the Tammany Society, in one of its pompous addresses, had recited the speculative spirit and consequent distress brought about by the multiplication of incorporated banks, and suggested that the Legislature adopt a prompt and decisive remedy tending to the abolition of those institutions. This sounded well; but at that very time, as before and after, the Sachems were lobbying at Albany for charters of banks of which they became presidents or directors. By one means or another these banks ¹ "The members [of the Legislature] themselves sometimes participated in the benefits growing out of charters created by their own votes; * * * if ten banks were chartered at one session, twenty must be chartered the next and thirty the next. The cormorants could never be gorged. If at one session you bought off a pack of greedy lobby agents * * * they returned with increased numbers and more voracious appetite."—Hammond, II: 447-48.

Four conspicuous "charter dealers" at Albany were Sachems Samuel B. Romaine, Michael Ulshoeffer, Peter Sharpe and Abraham Stagg, all powerful organization leaders.

yielded fortunes to their owners; but the currency issued by them almost invariably depreciated. The laboring classes on whom this bad private money was imposed complained of suffering severely. Each year, besides, witnessed an increase in the number of chartered monopolies, armed with formidable powers for long periods, or practically in perpetuity.¹ To the first gas company, in May, 1823, the Common Council had granted the exclusive right to light all the streets south of Grand street for thirty years, without returns of any kind to the city.² At the rate at which the city was expanding, this was a concession of immense value, and formed one of the subjects of complaint in 1829.

While laws were instituted to create a money aristocracy, the old debt and other laws bearing on the working classes were not changed. No attempt was made to improve a condition which allowed a dishonest contractor to put up a building or a series of buildings, collect his money and then swindle his laborers out of their wages. The local administration, moreover, continued corrupt. It was freely charged at this time that $250,000 of city money was being stolen outright every year. The city charter drafted and adopted in 1829-30 contained provisions which, it was thought, might remedy matters. It created two bodies of the Common Council—the Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen—and gave each a negative upon the propositions of the other, vesting a supreme veto power in the Mayor. It again separated the election of the Common Council from the general election. It abolished secret contracts and compelled all resolutions involving appropriations of public money or placing taxes or assessments to be advertised, and included other precautionary measures against corruption. But it opposed the public wish in still vesting the appointment of the Mayor in the Common Council.

¹ Hammond, II : 447-48.

² MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 48 : 59-60.

Principles of the Workingmen's Party.

To battle against the prevailing injustices the Mechanics' or Workingmen's party was formed. Its chief inspiration was Robert Dale Owen, son of the famous Robert Owen. "Dale" Owen, as he was familiarly known, and others had recently returned to the city after an unsuccessful experiment at co-operative colonizing at New Harmony, Indiana, and a number of bright and ardent intellects gathered about him. Boldly declaring against the private and exclusive possession of the soil and against the hereditary transmission of property, the new party won over a large part of the laboring element. "Resolved," ran its resolutions adopted at Military Hall, October 19, 1829,

"in the opinion of this meeting, that the first appropriation of the soil of the State to private and exclusive possession was eminently and barbarously unjust. That it was substantially feudal in its character, inasmuch as those who received enormous and unequal possessions were lords and those who received little or nothing were vassals. That hereditary transmission of wealth on the one hand and poverty on the other, has brought down to the present generation all the evils of the feudal system, and that, in our opinion, is the prime source of all our calamities."

After declaring that the Workingmen's party would oppose all exclusive privileges, monopolies and exemptions, the resolutions proceeded ;

"We consider it an exclusive privilege for one portion of the community to have the means of education in colleges while another is restricted to common schools, or perhaps, by extreme poverty, even deprived of the limited education to be acquired in those establishments. Our voice, therefore, shall be raised in favor of a system of education which shall be equally open to all, as in a real republic it should be."

The banks, too, came in for a share of the denunciation. The bankers were styled "the greatest knaves, imposters and paupers of the age." The resolutions continued :

"As banking is now conducted, the owners of the banks receive annually of the people of this State not less than two millions of dollars in their paper money (and it might as well be pewter money) for which there is and can be nothing provided for its redemption on demand * * * ."

The Workingmen put a full ticket in the field.

Denounced by the Wigwam.

Tammany Hall, dominated by some of the same men and interests denounced by the Workingmen's party, opened a campaign of abuse. Commercial and banking men outside the Wigwam joined ardently in the campaign. The new movement was declared to be a mushroom party, led by designing men, whose motives were destructive. The Evening Post, which represented the commercial element and which sided with Tammany in opposition to the new party, said that it remained for the really worthy mechanics who might have associated accidentally with that party, to separate themselves from it, now that its designs and doctrines were known. The Courier and Enquirer, partly owned and edited by Noah,¹ styled the Workingmen's party an infidel ticket, hostile to the morals, to the institutions of society and the rights of property. The Tammany Hall, or to speak more technically, the Democratic-Republican, General Committee, declaiming on the virtues of Jackson and Democracy, advised all good men, and especially all self-respecting laborers, not to vote the Workingmen's ticket.

Nevertheless, its principles made such an impression that in November it polled over 6,000 votes, while Tammany, with its compact organization, could claim little more than 11,000 votes. It was well settled that numbers of Whig workingmen voted the new party's ticket; and that the rich Whigs secretly worked for the success of Tammany Hall, whose ticket was almost entirely successful, though the Workingmen elected Ebenezer Ford to the Assembly.

Tammany Fathers a Mechanics' Lien Law.

Tammany was dismayed at the new party's strength, and determined to destroy it by championing one of the reform measures demanded. In January, 1830, a bill for the better security of mechanics and other laborers of New York City was introduced by Silas M. Stillwell. The Tammany men immediately took it up as if it were their own, urged its passage and secured the credit of its adoption, when in April, much emasculated, it became a law. It required, under penalties, the owner of a building to retain from the contractor the amount due to the mechanics employed thereon. By exploiting this performance to the utmost, Tammany succeeded in making some inroads on the Workingmen's party. The organization leaders had recognized that it was time they did something for the laboring classes. They were fast losing caste with even independent Democrats of means, because of their subservience to the aristocracy and of the common knowledge of the illegitimate ways in which they were amassing wealth.

¹ Noah, after falling into financial difficulties, had been ousted from the editorship of the National Advocate and had now become associated with his former political enemy, James Watson Webb, in the conduct of the Courier and Enquirer.

Tammany Mayor Elected by Fraud.

One result of the Workingmen's movement was the failure of the Wigwam to secure a majority in the Common Council. This seemed to frustrate the design to re-elect, as Mayor, Walter Bowne (Grand Sachem in 1820 and 1831). Fourteen Aldermen and Assistants were opposed to Bowne, and thirteen favored him. There was but one expedient calculated to re-elect him, and to this Tammany Hall resorted. Bowne, as presiding officer of the Council, held that the constitution permitted him to vote for the office of Mayor. "I will persist in this opinion even though the board decide against me," he said. To prevent a vote being taken, seven of Bowne's opponents withdrew on December 28, 1829. They went back on January 6, 1830, when Tammany managed to re-elect Bowne by one vote. How this vote was obtained was a mystery. Fourteen members declared under oath that they had voted for Thomas R. Smith, Bowne's opponent.¹ Charges of bribery were made, and an investigating committee was appointed on January 11; but as this committee was composed of Bowne's own partisans, it announced its inability to find proofs. Meanwhile the general committee¹ had issued a loftily worded manifesto saying that it (the committee) was established and was maintained to watch over the political interests of the Democratic-Republicans of the city and "to expose and repel the insidious and open machinations of their enemies," that it could not discover anything wrong in the conduct of the Chief Magistrate of the city, and that it "repelled the accusations of his enemies."

¹ MS. Minutes of the Common Council, 70 : 811. Shortly after this the Wigwam men removed Smith from his post of Commissioner of the Almshouse for opposing Bowne. So great was the haste to oust him, before the Aldermen went

Workingmen's Second Campaign.

The Workingmen's party continued its agitation, and prepared for another campaign. In the meantime the Wigwam's agents skillfully went about fomenting divisions, with the result that three tickets, all purporting to be the genuine Workingmen's, were put into the field in October, 1830. One was that of the "Clay Workingmen"; it was composed of a medley of admirers of Clay, the owners of stock in various great manufacturing establishments, workingmen who believed in a protective tariff, Whigs,² and a bunch of hack politout of office, that one of the board seconded the motion for his removal before the motion was made.

¹ The general committee was now composed of thirty-six members, mainly the directors in banking and other companies. Remonstrances at this time were frequent that its important proceedings were a sealed book to the electors. Among other things it dictated to the wards not only when, but where, they should meet.

² The term "Whig" had now come to have a definite party meaning, being used as a popular designation of the group led by John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay, officially known (1828-cians who had taken up the Workingmen's movement for selfish ends. The second was that of a fragment of the Workingmen's party of the year before, standing resolutely for their principles and containing no suspicious politicians or monopolists. The third was that of the Agrarian party, embracing a few individuals of views too advanced even for the Workingmen's party.

To the Clay Workingmen's party¹ Tammany Hall gave little attention, since it was made up mainly of Whigs who had always, under different names, been opposed to the organization. But the genuine movement Tammany Hall covered with abuse. "Look, fellow-citizens," said the address of the "general nominating committee,"

"upon the political horizon and mark the fatal signs prognosticating evils of a dire and fatal nature! Associations and political sects of a new and dangerous character have lately stalked into existence, menacing the welfare and good order of society. These associations, * * * have assumed to represent two of the most useful and respectable classes of our citizens—our Workingmen and Mechanics. * * * Confide in them, and when they have gained their ends they will treat you with derision and scorn! Then rally round your ancient and trusty friends and remember that honest men and good citizens never assume false names nor fight under borrowed banners!"

To display its devotion to the cause of Democracy, Tammany Hall celebrated, on November 26, the revolution in France. It persuaded former President James Monroe to preside in Tammany Hall at the preliminary arrangements, and made a studied parade of its zeal. There was a procession, Samuel Swartwout acting as grand marshal. Monroe, in a feeble state of health, was brought in a stage to Washington Square, where for ten minutes he looked on. A banquet, the usual high-flown speeches, and fireworks followed.

36) as the National Republican party. The term is first found in American politics applied to the Separatists during the Revolution. About 1808 it was taken by the Anti-Burr faction of the Democratic-Republican party.

¹ The men of this party, as a rule, voted the Anti-Masonic State ticket. While the Anti-Masonic party occasioned political commotion in the State, there is no evidence that it had any perceptible effect on Tammany's career.

Subsidence of the Workingmen's Movement.

The election was favorable to Tammany. About 3,800 workingmen who had supported the independent movement the previous year, went back to Tammany, because of its advocacy of the mechanics' lien law. The average Tammany plurality was 3,000. The real Workingmen's ticket polled a vote of about 2,200; the Clay Workingmen's ticket a little above 7,000, and the Agrarian, 116.

For the next few years the contest of Jackson with the United States Bank drew together the energies of all Democrats supporting him. Dropping local contests, they united to renew his power. For the time, the Workingmen's movement ceased to exist.

CHAPTER XI.

TAMMANY AND THE BANK CONTEST.

1831-1834.

Tammany lost no time in announcing its intention to support the renomination of Jackson. The general committee, on March 3, 1831, unanimously passed a resolution approving of his renomination by the Democratic members of the Legislature. Seven days later the General Committee of Democratic Young Men and the ward committees acted likewise.

Since the campaign of 1800 there had not been a Presidential contest in which the masses joined with such enthusiasm. Although the national election was more than 18 months distant, the excitement was intense. The late Workingmen's party and Tammany men fraternized. The ward resolutions were full of fire, the meetings spirited. The Democratic electors of the Sixth Ward "friendly to regular nominations" resolved, on March 15 :

" * * * That aristocracy in all its forms is odious to us as Democratic-Republicans, and that of all aristocracies an aristocracy of wealth, grinding the faces of the poor and devouring the substance of the people, is the most alarming. That we regard an incorporated association of rich men wielding the whole monied capital of the country, as dangerous to our rights and liberties. That we consider the next Presidential election as substantially a contest between the people on one side and the monied aristocracy of the country on the other."¹

¹ Advertisement in the Evening Post, March 17, 1831.

The Wigwam Wins for Jackson.

The organization's first object was to gain a majority of the local offices in the Spring election of 1831 on the Jackson issue. The National Republican party, recently organized in New York City on the same general lines as Tammany Hall, and headed by Clarkson Crolius, a former Grand Sachem, set out to crush the Jackson movement. If a defeat could be administered to it at this time, the practical effect would be great; New York would possibly influence the entire Union. To accomplish this, the National Republicans tried to divert the issue to local lines and agitated for the election of the Mayor by the people. The Tammany men joined issue at once, and in February, 1831, the Common Council committee on application, composed chiefly of Tammany men, reported adversely on a motion to suggest to the Legislature a revision of the charter. The time was declared to be inexpedient for such an innovation, one Tammany Alderman, Thomas T. Woodruff, declaring, when the matter again came up, on April 8, that the people could not be trusted with the choice of that important official. The National Republicans replied by denouncing the Common Council for its lavish expenditures of public money, its distribution of favors in the shape of "jobs" and contracts among a few retainers whose sole merits lay in their close relationship to certain managing members of the board, and for its efforts to prevent the people from having the right to elect their own Mayor.¹

¹ Resolutions of the Sixth Ward Anti-Tammany Republicans, March 24, 1831.

The opposition to Tammany was ineffectual. In the ensuing election, no less than 22 of the 28 members chosen for the new double-chamber Common Council were Tammany men, elected solely upon their pledge of allegiance to the national and State administrations. The first trial of the new charter, therefore, showed that the separation of municipal from general elections did not prevent the division of the voters on national party lines. The extent of this preliminary Jackson victory made a sensation throughout the Union and caused gloom among the United States Bank supporters.

An Imposing Banquet.

The prestige of Tammany Hall was now overwhelming; its influence upon the Democratic party, great before, became greater. No aspirant for public favor could ignore its demands and decrees. When, on May 12, the society held an imposing celebration of the forty-second anniversary of its founding, politicians from the highest to the lowest, national and local, four hundred and over, crowded there with words of flattery. Lewis Cass, Nathaniel P. Tallmadge, the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of the State of New York; members of the National Senate and of the House of Representatives—these and the rest were glad to avail themselves of the invitation. William Mooney was there, very old and feeble, beaming with pride at the power of the institution he had founded.¹ After the banquet, which was described in the old Indian terms, as consisting

¹ Mooney passed away the following November. Tammany passed panegyric resolutions on his character, and organized a large funeral procession which escorted his body to the grave.

"of the game of [the forest, the fish of the lakes, the fruits of the season and the waters of the great spring," came the reading of letters. Jackson wrote: "Nothing could afford me greater gratification than to participate with your ancient and honorable society of Republicans on such an occasion," but that press of official duties kept him away. A letter of regret, in high-flown and laudatory diction, from Secretary of State Martin Van Buren followed. James Watson Webb proposed this toast: "Martin Van Buren, the Grand Sachem of the Eagle Tribe—The Great Spirit is pleased with his faithful support of the Great Grand Sachem of the Nation and smiles graciously upon the sages and warriors of the tribe who aim to elevate their chief in 1836 to the highest station in the country." This was greeted by nine cheers, and instantly disclosed Tammany's choice for Jackson's successor in 1836. The only troublous note was furnished by Duff Green, who sprang this toast upon the surprised gathering: "De Witt Clinton—His friends honor his memory—his enemies dare not assail it!" By "enemies" he referred to those present; they retorted that he was an intruder, was not invited, and had not paid for his ticket.¹ Mayor Bowne was then installed as Grand Sachem in place of Stephen Allen, the former Mayor.

Another Local Triumph.

The Fall election of 1831 also turned upon national issues. Upon Jackson's popularity nearly every Democratic candidate in New York City was elected by an average majority of 6,000. There were rumors of illegal voting, but no proof was submitted. The Wigwam was so overjoyed at the result that a banquet was held on November 21, presided over by Benjamin Bailey, who for a dozen years had been chairman of the general committee. He had reached his seventy-second year and could claim little political influence. But as a captain in the Revolutionary army, and as one of those confined in the Jersey prison ships, the Tammany chiefs considered him a valuable figurehead. Gen. Wool, Cols. Twiggs and Crogham and five hundred men of various importance spent the night in the Wigwam drinking to Jackson, Tammany Hall and coming victory.

¹ Green was an influential and intimate friend of Jackson and a member of his "Kitchen Cabinet." He had come up from Washington to attend the banquet as one of Jackson's personal representatives.

Not only did Tammany take the initiative in supporting Jackson, but it was the first body to nominate Van Buren for Vice-President. On the news of the Senate's rejection of Van Buren as Minister to England, an indignation meeting was held in Tammany Hall, January 30, 1832, this being the opening expression of public opinion. Van Buren was suggested for Vice-President, and the Wigwam gathering showed its satisfaction by repeated cheers.¹ Twenty-four leading Tammany men drew up a letter containing their sentiments on Van Buren's rejection, and on May 31 an outpouring in the Wigwam approved his nomination.

Playing Double on the Bank Issue.

Then followed a striking revelation, showing the venality of some of Tammany's leaders. The United States

¹ The Courier and Enquirer, owned by Webb and Noah, promptly came out with this ticket in large black type upon

Bank officials began bargaining for the betrayal of Jackson. The Courier and Enquirer suddenly abandoned him for the support of the bank candidates, giving as a reason the fear of the "fearful consequences of revolution, anarchy and despotism," which assuredly would ensue if Jackson were re-elected. The real reason was that Webb and Noah, as revealed by a Congressional investigation,¹ had borrowed directly and indirectly $50,000 from the United States Bank, which had now called them to time. Mayor Bowne was their sponsor to Nicholas Biddle, head of the bank. Some of the other Tammany leaders, it appeared, had been for years the bank's retainers. Representative Churchill C. Cambreleng enjoyed a place on its pay rolls. Gulian C. Verplanck, another of the Wigwam's representatives in Congress, had voted in its behalf, and Stephen Allen, in the State Senate, had voted for a resolution in its favor. Peter Sharpe, Ogden Edwards,² William H. Ireland, John Morss—all influential men in times past—now vigorously opposed Jackson, and the services of other Tammany chiefs were secured.

Two influences, however, prevented the organization

its editorial page: For President, Andrew Jackson. For Vice-President, Martin Van Buren.

¹ "The First Session of the Twenty-Second Congress," Vol. IV., containing reports from Nos. 460 to 463, Washington, 1831.

² Edwards was for many years a person of great power in the organization. In 1821, while Counsel to the Board of Aldermen, a salaried office, he was specifically charged with having mulcted the city out of $5,414 as a payment for a few hours' service in arranging the details of a delinquent tax sale. Further charges credited him with having cleaned up more than $50,000 in five years, through various pickings connected with his office. Such, however, was his influence, that he not only escaped prosecution, but retained an unimpaired prestige in the organization.

leaders from betraying the Democratic cause—one the common people, the other the owners of the State banks, whose self-interest called for the speedy downfall of the United States Bank. Finding that they could not control the Wigwam, the Tammany agents of that bank seceded, and joined the National Republicans. The State Bank men remained in the organization and labored for Jackson, with no other idea than that their institutions would benefit in the distribution of Government funds if the United States Bank were put down. The course of the leaders remaining in Tammany smacked of double dealing. Refusing to renominate Verplanck, they put in his place Dudley Selden, who had borrowed $8,000 from the United States Bank, but who had professed to support Jackson's veto. It looked as though certain potent influences were operating in Tammany Hall for the election of a pro-bank Congress, whoever might be chosen President.

Presidential Campaign of 1832.

The Tammany ward organizations, assisted by the men of the late Workingmen's party, appointed vigilance committees to undo any mischief the leaders might attempt, and to electioneer for Jackson's success. So enthusiastic was the Jackson feeling that many politicians of note, understanding its depth and having a care for their political futures, made haste to change front. Almost daily the people were rallied to the Wigwam by the beating of drums. A few years before, a hickory tree had been planted in front of the Wigwam; now, on October 30, a second was put there, and a barrel of beer was used to moisten its roots.

Both sides were guilty of election frauds. Votes were bought at the rate of $5 each, most of the buying being done by the National Republicans, who were supplied with abundant resources. The National Republicans, moreover, had sought to bribe certain men with the promise of offices, and on the three election days they foisted upon the voters a Jackson electoral ticket containing forty-three names, instead of the legal number, forty-two, thereby invalidating each of these ballots voted. This trick, it was calculated, lost to Jackson more than a thousand votes. Of a total of 30,474 votes, Tammany carried the city by 5,620 majority. The Wigwam for many successive nights was filled with celebrating crowds. Jackson gave a conspicuously public display of his recognition of Tammany's invaluable services, when, on the evening of June 13, 1833, he visited the society, attended by the Vice-President, Secretary Woodbury, Gov. William L. Marcy, the Mayor, and the members of the Common Council.

Aldermanic Report on Election Frauds.

The United States Bank supporters did not surrender with Jackson's re-election. They exerted themselves to influence Congress by means of a defeat for the anti-bank forces in New York City in the Fall election of 1833. Tammany Hall during the campaign sent out runners ordering every office-holder to his electioneering post. Vigorous meetings were held, and all the secret influences of the general committee were employed. On the other hand, merchants laid aside their ruffled shirts and broadcloth coats, put on their roundabouts and worked at the polls on the three election days for the Whig ticket. Tammany carried the city by between 2,000 and 3,000 majority. Touching this and previous elections a committee of Assistant Aldermen reported on February 10, 1834: "That frauds have been practised at the polls, the committee are convinced. At any rate, a universal and deep conviction prevails among our citizens that tricks have been resorted to for the purpose of defeating the election of one candidate and securing that of another." It was further set forth that persons were brought up to vote who were not citizens of the United States nor qualified to vote in the State. Others voted in more than one ward. Voters also were transferred overnight from a sure to a doubtful ward.¹ No remedy followed the report.

First Mayoralty Election by the People.

The Spring election of 1834, though local, again turned upon national issues. For the first time in the history of the city, the Mayor was to be elected by the people. The growth of public opinion had been such that the Legislature was forced, in 1833, to grant this reform.

The contending hosts were swayed, first, by the question of the United States Bank, and second, by the spoils. The merchants shut their shops and sent their whole body of clerks and laboring men to surround the polls and influence voters against Tammany Hall. The United States Bank spread abroad the cry of "panic." If its directors could show that public opinion in the foremost city in the Union had altered so as to favor the continuation of the bank charter, then they could use that as a good basis for influencing Congress. There was no concealment of coercion of voters; the weak, the timid, the fearful were overawed by the increasing clamor of paid newspapers that the destruction of the United States Bank meant "widespread revulsion of trade and everlasting injury to the poor." In fact, a general depression of business was produced. A row began in the "bloody ould Sixth," by the breaking of some ballot boxes. Both parties armed with stones and bludgeons, and turned the scene into one of violence. The riot became general. A crowd, composed chiefly of Whigs, ransacked gun-shops in Broadway and made for the State arsenal at Elm and Franklin streets. Rumors of their intentions spreading, a gathering of peaceably inclined citizens arrived before them and held the arsenal until the militia hastened there and restored order.¹

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, 1834, No. 82.

Cornelius W. Lawrence, the Tammany candidate, was declared elected by 181 votes out of a total of nearly 35,000² over Gulian C. Verplanck, who had gone over to the Whigs. Verplanck never ceased to contend that he had been defrauded of the office. The Whigs obtained a majority in the Common Council, 17 members to the Wigwam's 15, and joyfully said that Tammany Hall in electing the Mayor had the shadow; while they, in securing the corporation, had the substance. With the Common Council they could carry the whole patronage of the city, amounting to more than a $1,000,000 a year.

¹ Documents of the Board of Alderman, 1839, No. 29.

² Lawrence, 17,576; Verplanck, 17,895; blank and scattering, 18; total, 34,889.

This election demonstrated clearly that the propertied classes as a whole were combined against the laborers, mechanics, farmers and producing classes generally, and that they were as much concerned over the spoils of office as was the most rabid Tammany man. As a protest against the indifference of the local leaders of both parties to the real interests of the people, and to put a stop to the granting of special privileges, the Equal Rights party now came into existence.

CHAPTER XII.

THE EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY.

1834-1837.

The Equal Rights movement, which began its activity inside the Tammany organization, was virtually a moral, then a political, revival of the Workingmen's movement. Its principles, however, were less radical, and its demands more moderate. It advocated the equal rights of every citizen in his person and property and in their management; declared unqualified and uncompromising opposition to bank notes as a circulating medium, because gold and silver were the only safe and constitutional currency, and a like opposition to all monopolies by legislation. It also announced hostility "to the dangerous and unconstitutional creation of vested rights by legislation, because these were an usurpation of the people's sovereign rights," and asserted that all laws or acts of incorporation passed by the Legislature could be rightfully altered or repealed by its successors. The Equal Rights movement comprised men of various classes. Moses Jacques and Levi D. Slamm were its principal leaders. To comprehend its nature, a brief review of the causes which conspired to bring it into being will be necessary.

Attempt to Restore Imprisonment for Debt.

Up to 1831 the repeal of the law for the imprisonment of debtors had been a subject of almost constant agitation by reformers and workingmen. Under this law more than 10,000 persons, mainly unfortunate laborers, were imprisoned annually in loathsome prisons, without inquiry as to their innocence or guilt, lying there at their creditors' will, unsupplied by the city with any of the necessities of life.¹ Tammany Hall had taken no action until 1831, when its leaders gave a belated approval to a bill introduced in the Assembly, abolishing imprisonment for debts of any sum except in the cases of non-residents.²

This bill had become a law in that year; yet by 1833 the interest of Tammany's chiefs in the workingman had died away to such an extent that the Assembly was allowed to pass a measure entitled "a law abolishing imprisonment for debt," but reinstituting imprisonment on all debts under $50, thus completely nullifying the law so far as the poor were concerned.

The measure failed to become a law; but the sharp practice shown in its wording, and in the means taken to push it through the Assembly, disgusted the Equal Rights men, and in their meetings they passed resolutions denouncing the chiefs responsible therefor. Their resolutions furthermore declared that the proceedings at Tammany Hall were a sealed book; that a few men—William Paxen Hallett, Elisha Tibbits, J. J. Roosevelt and John Y. Cebra—made up important nominations in Wall street after the bankers had decided upon the candidates and then had the nominating committee accept them.

¹ The minutes of the Common Council covering these years show continuous records of petitions from imprisoned debtors, praying for fuel and the patching up of windows in the dead of Winter. Charitable societies were in existence to supply the jailed debtors with food.

² This singular provision, by which non-residents were liable to imprisonment for debt, while the natives of the city were exempted, was erased in 1840.

The Charter Scandals.

Popular disaffection was increased by the manner in which the Legislature and the Aldermen continued to create corporations with enormous grants. The scandals over the procurement of legislative charters, particularly bank charters, had for more than 25 years aroused a growing indignation among the people. In 1805, shortly after the passage of the Merchants' Bank charter, Peter Betts, an Assemblyman, declared in open session of the lower house, that Luke Metcalfe, a fellow-member, had sought to bribe him to vote for the measure. The price promised was 15 shares of the bank's stock, valued at $50 each. Conflicting testimony was given on the matter, and a motion was made to expel Metcalfe; the house, however, retained him in his seat by a vote of 37 to 16.¹

Charges of the same kind, affecting practically every session of the Legislature, were common, though only occasionally were they made the subject of official investigation. In 1812, however, shortly after the Assembly, forced by public criticism, had passed a resolution compelling each member to pledge himself that he had neither taken nor would take, "any reward or profit, direct or indirect, for any vote on any measure,"² another scandal arose. The Bank of America, with very moderate assets of any sort, received a charter on a stated capitalization of $6,000,000, an enormous sum in those days. Charges of corruption were bandied about, one Assemblyman, Silas Holmes, declaring under oath that the sum of $500, "besides a handsome present," had been offered him. A committee of the lower house listened to testimony in the case, and then, by a decisive majority, voted that the body was above suspicion.¹ But in a pronunciamiento to Gov. Tompkins during the same year the same house graciously reported: "We are well aware that the number of charters for banking institutions already granted has awakened general solicitude and anxiety."

¹ Journal of the Senate and Assembly, 1805 : 351 and 399.

² Ibid., 1812 : 134.

The Chemical Bank was a more modern instance. The report of the joint legislative committee in 1824 had shown that its promoters set apart $50,000 worth of stock at par value² to buy the votes of members, Gen. Robert Swartwout—he who had defaulted for $68,000 in 1820—acting as one of the lobbyists and claiming $5,000 for his services.³ Other scandals throwing strong light on legislative practices were those of the Aetna and Chatham Fire Insurance Companies. The testimony brought out in the investigation of these companies in 1826 showed that William J. Waldron (one of the line of Grand Sachems) gave $20,000 in certificates of stock to Gen. Jasper Ward, a State Senator, and $20,000 more to various other persons to get the Aetna charter through

¹ Journal of the Senate and Assembly, 1812: 259-60.

² Stock given at par value meant an almost immediate rise in value to the legislator. Most stocks went upward from 10 to 15 per cent. on the passage of the charter, and in the case of the more profitable and exploitative corporations, far higher advances were scored in a short time.

³ Journal of the Senate, 1824: 498-532.

the Legislature.¹ The Chatham charter, passed in 1822, cost $20,000 in stock at par value, additional sums being paid for the passage of certain amendments in 1824.² Ward wrote from Albany to a friend in the city, complaining that the Jefferson Fire Insurance Company, which secured a charter at the same time (1824) had paid only 5 per cent. of what it had promised, giving notes for the remainder.³ These were but a few examples of the general legislative corruption. The men who profited by these charters brought about, in 1830, the exemption of bank stock in the city from taxation. That nearly every Tammany leader held bank stock was proved by the testimony before an investigating committee in June, 1833, which set forth how the organizers of the newly founded Seventh Ward Bank had distributed thousands of shares among over one hundred State and city office-holders, both Tammany and Anti-Masonic. Every Tammany Senator was involved. James Perkins, the principal lobbyist for the charter, swore repeatedly that $5,000 in stock at par value had been taken directly by State Senators and from $10,000 to $25,000 in stock distributed indirectly.⁴ Perkins charged Thurlow Weed with accepting a $500 bribe.⁵ The investigating committee reported finally that it could find no proof involving any but one of the accused.⁶ As the bill for the charter had originally passed the Senate by a vote of 27 to 2,¹ and as the members of the investigating committee had been chosen from this majority, its conclusions were naturally viewed with a good deal of suspicion.

¹ Journal of the Senate, 1826: 6, appendix B. A considerable part of the money and stock promised the members of the Legislature for their votes was withheld owing to the expected investigation.

² Ibid. ³ Ibid.

⁴ Senate Documents, 1834, No. 47, and Ibid., No. 94. Walter Bowne was the bank's president. ⁵ Ibid., No. 94. ⁶ Ibid., No. 47.

Fraudulent Paper Currency.

The Equal Rights men complained that 75 per cent. of the whole of the bank notes circulating in New York City consisted of depreciated paper. The circulation of these in notes of $5 or under amounted by March, 1835, to nearly $1,500,000. One establishment alone, whose weekly pay-roll in 1834 amounted to $40,000, paid the greater part of this sum in depreciated notes. The wage-earner was in constant fear that any morning he might wake to hear that the bank whose notes he held had failed. Frequently the worst deceptions on the public were contrived at by the officials. The Hudson Insurance Company, for instance, with a nominal capital of $200,000, was permitted to issue bonds to the amount of $800,000, upon the most fictitious resources. This was far from being an isolated instance. The law allowed a bank with only $100,000 capital to loan $250,000, thus receiving interest on more than twice the capital actually invested.*

"Jobs" in the Council.

The Council was more than ever a hotbed of venality. Numberless small "jobs" were perpetrated without public notice; but when it was proposed in October, 1831, to give the Harlem Railroad Company the franchise for the perpetual and exclusive use of Fourth avenue, free of all payment to the city, Alderman George Sharp, one of the few public-spirited members, drew general attention to the matter by an energetic denunciation. After every other means had been resorted to without success to influence his vote, he was told that he would be excluded from the party by certain persons at Tammany Hall. Alderman Stevens, who declared that he had seen stock given to members of the board and to the "corps editorial" to secure their influence, was also threatened. The words of these two men proved conclusively the truth of what for a long time was common report: that the group of Tammany leaders not only controlled the party nominations but threatened public officials with their displeasure, with all which that implied—exile from public life, loss of political influence, perhaps ruin of fortune—in case they did not vote for certain measures whose "merits" were recommended to them.

¹ Journal of the Senate, 1833: 896.

* Documents of the Senate, 1834, No. 108.

New Ferries Withheld.

The laborer had other grievances. For seventeen years the Council had refused to grant any additional ferries between New York City and Brooklyn. During that period the population of New York had increased 150,000 and that of Brooklyn 15,000. This growth involved a vast amount of marketing and increased the business intercourse between the two places more than fourfold. The lessees of the Fulton Ferry—the sole ferry—had made an agreement in 1811, it was alleged, with the New York City Corporation, by which the latter undertook to bind itself not to establish any additional ferries from south of Catherine street to the Village of Brooklyn for twenty-five years. The large landholders influenced the Common Council to continue this monopoly, their aim being to force the people to stay in New York, where rents were 35 per cent. higher than in any other city in the Union. The exactions of the water, gas and steamboat monopolies likewise had a share in causing the formation of the Equal Rights party.

Besides the dispensing to favored knots of citizens of trading privileges and immunities which were withheld from the great body of the community, the laboring element believed that there was a gross inequality of taxation in the interests of the rich. Taxes rose from $550,000 in 1832 to $850,000 in 1833, but the increase fell upon the poor. The Merchants' Bank was assessed at $6,000; the lot and building had cost that sum twenty years before, and were now worth at least twice as much. The Merchants' Exchange was assessed at $115,000, yet it was known that the land and building had cost $300,000. Dozens of like instances were cited by the reformers and they now determined upon a concerted effort looking to better government.

Bryant Supports the New Movement.

A powerful influence came to the aid of the Equal Rights men when William Cullen Bryant and William Leggett assumed the editorship of the Evening Post. This journal now advocated industrial and political reforms with singular independence and ability. It revived the original conception of the nominating committee's functions. It urged the electors to remember that the nomination by a nominating committee was but a recommendation to the people of certain candidates whose merits and qualifications were as fair a matter of discussion as any under Heaven; and that it was for this very purpose that nominations were made so long before the great popular meeting was convened. Besides his editorial support of the movement, Leggett participated in the practical work of its organization and management. The clear thought and definite expression shown in most of the Equal Rights manifestoes and resolutions are perhaps directly due to him.

The Equal Rights faction became especially active in the Fall of 1834. Its orators raised such a stir that both Tammany Hall and the Whigs suddenly developed an astonishing care for the workingmen. To conciliate them, the Tammany Nominating Committee exacted a written pledge from every one of its candidates requiring an expression of his sentiments on the monopoly question. To counteract the Wigwam, the Whigs gathered a meeting of "Whig Mechanics" at Masonic Hall, October 14, at which opposition to monopolies, especially banking monopolies, was declared. Not to be outdone, the Wigwam got together a meeting of "Democratic Mechanics," who resolved to oppose monopolies and to restore the constitutional currency. Tammany also began to recognize, even more liberally than before, the naturalized citizens. As a consequence, it won the Fall (1834) election by over 2,300 majority, most of the Equal Rights men voting with it. One-third of its 18,000 voters were estimated at this time to be of foreign birth.

Nearly all the Tammany Assemblymen proceeded to forget their pledges, only four of the delegation voting in the February following against the bill giving exclusive privileges to the Peaconic Company.

Clash of the Factions.

The first clash between the Equal Rights faction and the Tammany monopolists occurred at a meeting at the Wigwam on March 31, 1835. Certain that the Aldermen would never grant additional ferries, the Equal Rights men favored a measure, then pending in the Legislature, for the establishment of a State Board of Commissioners clothed with that power. Gideon Lee,¹ a Wall Street banker, called the meeting to order and nominated Preserved Fish for chairman. Many objections were uttered, and Fish retired. The radicals howled down the Tammany speakers and ran the meeting themselves, adopting resolutions prepared by Joel P. Seaver, declaring for the creation of the State board. A bill for a new ferry—the present South Ferry—was passed the same year.

The Equal Rights men still hoped to gain their ends inside the organization. When Cornelius W. Lawrence² stood for re-election as Mayor in April, 1835, there was scarcely any opposition to him from any quarter, he receiving 17,696 votes out of a total of 20,196.

Equal Rights Men Secede.

In the Fall of 1835, however, the Tammany Nominating Committee recommended for State offices candidates of a character most obnoxious to the Equal Rights men, and called a meeting for the evening of October 29, to ratify its nominations. Barely were the doors opened when the Equal Rights men rushed in and frustrated an attempt to place Isaac L. Varian in the chair. In the melee, the Bank Democrats, finding themselves unable to control the meeting, withdrew, but in doing so turned off the gas, leaving the Equal Rights men in total darkness. The trick must have been anticipated; for each man drew forth a candle and a lucifer, or "loco foco" match, and in a twinkling the hall was resplendent with dancing lights. The Equal Rights men adopted resolutions and a suitable ticket of their own.¹

¹ Lee was the last Mayor elected by the Common Council (1833-34).

² Lawrence had a curious habit of strolling the streets carrying his spectacles in his hand behind his back, and ogling all the pretty girls he met, a habit which was broken later when one winsome lass tangled him in a plot, much to his financial and mental distress.

Three sets of candidates stood for election. The Native Americans, who opposed the election of foreigners to office and urged the repeal of the naturalization laws, took the place of the Whigs. In the face of this strong sentiment, Tammany Hall acted with its usual diplomacy. The general committee boasted that the regular Tammany ticket was composed of only native Americans, which was true, the naturalized citizens having been cajoled on the promise of receiving the usual quota among nominations the next year. Of the nearly 23,000 votes cast at the election, Tammany Hall obtained an average majority of about 800. The Native Americans polled 9,000 votes, and the Equal Rights men, or Anti-Monopolists, over 3,500. It was estimated that 2,000 Whigs voted the Tammany ticket to defeat the Anti-Monopolists, and that about 5,500 Whig votes were divided between Tammany Hall and the Native Americans.

¹ The next day the Equal Rights men were dubbed "Loco-focos," a name afterward applied by the Whigs to the entire Democratic party.

Corruption Continues.

The news of its slight plurality was hailed with anything but pleasure at the Wigwam, where the Anti-Monopolists were denounced as political swindlers and adventurers. Instead, however, of making a show of outward fairness, the organization leaders blindly took the course most adapted to fan the flame of opposition to themselves. After the great fire of 1835, which destroyed $20,000,000 worth of property, and the extent of which was due to the refusal of the corrupt Aldermen to give the city a proper water supply, the Common Council agreed to loan $6,000,000 at 5 per cent. interest for the relief of insurance companies and banks which had suffered from the fire.¹ Nothing was said or done for the relief of the poor sufferers whom the Wigwam claimed to have under its especial protection. The Council allowed pawnbrokers 25 per cent. interest and prohibited them from loaning more than $25 on a single pledge.² The city institutions were in a melancholy state.³ Most serious of all on the public mind were the disclosures concerning the Commercial Bank, from which funds were embezzled in the scheme of cornering the stock of the Harlem Railroad. As a step towards this end, Samuel Swartwout and Garrit Gilbert (a sometime Sachem) lobbied for the passage of a bill to increase the capital stock of this road, which in turn, it was thought, would increase the price of all the stock—two

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1836, Nos. 65 and 100.

² Ibid., 1837, No. 48. ³ Ibid., 1837, No. 32.

Senators agreeing to raise objections temporarily "so as to blind the eyes of the New Yorkers."¹

Workingmen and the Law.

The leaders made no effort to stop the granting of charters, or to curtail the monopolist privileges already granted. It was admitted generally that no legislation even remotely affecting the interests of the banks could pass without the consent of those institutions. Tradesmen also had their combinations. But combinations, legal enough when organized by capital, were declared illegal when formed by workingmen. At this time the Supreme Court of the State of New York decided that combinations to raise the wages of any class of laborers amounted to a misdemeanor, on the ground that they were injurious to trade. Later, in June, 1836, twenty tailors were found guilty of conspiracy under that decision and fined by Judge Edwards $1,150 in the aggregate for engaging in a strike for higher wages.

The mechanics prepared to hold an indignation meeting and applied for permission to use Tammany Hall. This was refused by the Sachems.* In defiance of

¹ Documents of the Senate, 1836, Vol. II., No. 94.

* A short time before, at an Anti-Monopolist meeting, Chairman Job Haskell had represented that the Tammany Society—the secret body, responsible to no one and enforcing its demands through the Tammany Hall political organization—was to blame for the political corruption. Resolutions were then passed setting forth that whereas the self-constituted, self-perpetuating Tammany Society had assumed a dictatorial attitude and by usages made by itself endeavored to rule the people as with a rod of iron; and as they (the Equal Rights men) believed the people were capable of managing their own affairs without the aid of said inquisitorial society, "that we deem the Tammany Society an excrescence upon the body politic and dangerous to its rights and liberties."

the Wigwam, the meeting, a gathering of 20,000 persons, was held in the park fronting Tammany Hall. "Are workingmen," read the address of the committee of this meeting,

"free in reality when they dare not obey the first instinct of all animated beings; when our courts pronounce it criminal to exercise nature's paramount law of self-preservation? Trades unions and mechanick societies are only self-protective against the countless combinations of aristocracy; boards of bank and other chartered directories; boards of brokers; boards of trade and commerce; combinations of landlords; coal and wood dealers; monopolists and all those who grasp at everything and produce nothing. If all these combinations are suffered to exist, why are trades unions and combinations of workingmen denounced? Should they not have an equal chance in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness? Should they not have an equal right with the other classes of society, in their person, in their property or labor, and in their management?"

The meeting, in strong resolutions, condemned the Supreme Court decision and that of Judge Edwards.

Deadlock in the Council.

At this moment the peculiar Wigwam methods were being displayed in another direction to an edified public. In the first days of May, 1836, the Board of Aldermen found itself divided equally, Tammany Hall and the Whigs each having eight votes, precluding either from electing a president. The Tammany members, in the tea-room downstairs, made merry over refreshments. The Whigs could not muster a quorum, and sent word to the organization men to appear; the Wigwam men replied that they didn't choose, and bade the Whigs come to them. Meanwhile the public business stood still. Finally the balloting was begun. On May 23, seventeen votes were found to have been cast, although there were only sixteen voting Aldermen.¹ By the end of May more than 120 ballots were had. At last, on July 1, the Tammany men persuaded Alderman Ward, a Whig, to offer a resolution electing Isaac L. Varian, a Wigwam candidate, for the first six months, which was done.

Anti-Tammany Resolutions.

Taking these proceedings as a cue, the Equal Rights party, on June 6, at Military Hall, adopted a long series of resolutions stating that the aristocracy of the democracy, or in other words, the monopolists, the paper-currency Democrats, the partisans of the "usages," had long deceived and misguided the great body of the Democrats. Through these "usages," the tools of the banks and other incorporated and speculative interests were enabled to take advantage of the unsuspecting self-security of the people, both before and at primary meetings. By the aristocracy and through secret caucuses, candidates were chosen, proceedings were cut and dried, and committees were packed. When committees could not be packed without opposition, the resolutions further read, two sets of committeemen were usually elected, and that set whose political complexion best suited the packed majority of the general committee was always accepted without any regard to the majorities of the people. The Union did not furnish a more dangerous usurpation upon the sovereignty of the people than the fact of the Tammany Hall Nominating Committee sending recently a petition to the Legislature in favor of chartering more banks and banking paper capital and designating themselves, not as citizens, but as members of the nominating committee, notwithstanding the very nominees of such a committee had given their written pledge to oppose new banks and monopolies.

¹ Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, XI : 16.

The "usages," the Equal Rights party next resolved, so productive of secret caucuses, intrigues and abuses, furnished the avenue through which one portion of the Democracy had been corrupted, and the other portion—the great mass—led astray. The latter was taught to believe that "usages" alone made men Democrats, and that to keep Federalists and Whigs out of office was the very essence of Democracy.¹

The Equal Rights party then nominated Isaac L. Smith, of Buffalo, for Governor, and Moses L. Jacques, of New York City, for Lieutenant-Governor.

Campaign of 1836.

To draw from the strength of the new party, some of Tammany's leaders—Samuel Swartwout, Jesse Hoyt, Stephen Allen, Saul Alley and a few others—professed to favor the repeal of the Restraining law, which in effect prohibited private banking and gave the incorporated institutions a monopoly. The Anti-Monopolists were not to be deluded. On September 21 they declared that in the recent professions of the Tammany corruptionists in advocating this repeal and in favoring some other few minor democratic measures, they beheld the stale expedient of luring the bone and sinew of the country to the support of their monopoly and banking men and measures and that they had no faith in Tammany "usages," policy or its incorrigible Sachems.

¹ These resolutions were published officially in the Evening Post, June 8, 1836.

The characters of most of the Wigwam nominations were so tainted that it seemed as if the candidates were put forward in defiance of the best public sentiment. It is not so certain that outside the Equal Rights party the voters were repelled by the current methods of buying legislation and dictating nominations. A low tone of public morals was manifested. Men were bent on money-making. He who could get rich by grace of the Legislature was thought "smart" and worthy of emulation. The successful in politics were likewise to be envied, and, if possible, imitated. A large part of the community bowed in respect to the person of wealth, no matter whence came his riches; and the bank lobbyists were the recipients of a due share of this reverence.

From these men the Tammany leaders selected candidates. One of the Assembly nominees was Prosper M. Wetmore, who had lobbied for the notorious State Bank charter. This bank, according to the charter, was to have $10,000,000 capital, although its organizers did not have more than a mere fraction of that sum. This was going too far, even for Albany, though upon modifying their application, the charter was granted.¹ Reuben Withers and James C. Stoneall, bank lobbyists; Benjamin Ringgold, a bank and legislative "go-between," and Morgan L. Smith, pre-eminent among lobbyists, were other Tammany nominees. Notwithstanding the low standards of public morals, these men were so unpopular, that when the form of submitting their names for ratification to the great popular meeting at the Wigwam on November 1, was carried out, a hostile demonstration followed. The names of Wetmore, Smith and Ringgold especially were hooted. But the leaders had groups of "whippers-in" brought in hurriedly to vote affirmatively, and the presiding officer declared all the nominees duly accepted by the people.

¹ Cornelius W. Lawrence, the Tammany Mayor, became the bank's first president.

Only six of the organization's thirteen Assembly nominees survived the popular wrath, and the nominees for nearly all the other offices were beaten, notwithstanding the expectation that the Presidential election would carry them in on the party ticket. A number of Tammany men of principle refused to vote. The Whigs, the Native Americans and some "Locofocos" joined forces. They were aided by the panic, which, breaking out shortly before election, reacted against the Democrats. The Equal Rights men as a rule voted for Van Buren. Tammany Hall and the Whigs both committed frauds. Van Buren received 1,124 majority in New York City, which in 1832 had given Jackson nearly 6,000 majority.

Sufferings of the Poor.

Made wiser by defeat, the organization leaders realized the importance of the Equal Rights movement, and caused, as a sop, the passage, in February, 1837, of the bill repealing the Restraining act. The Common Council likewise modified the Pawnbrokers' act by cutting down the interest to a more reasonable percentage.¹

Their providence stopped at this point, however,² and

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1837, No. 48.

² Excepting some instances of private charity by Tammany leaders.

during the panic Winter following neither Legislature nor Common Council did anything to alleviate the miseries of the poor. On the contrary, the poor complained that the tendency more and more was to use the power of the law to make the rich richer. While the suffering was greatest, Alderman Aaron Clark, a Whig, who had made his fortune from lotteries, proposed that the city spend several millions of dollars to surround its water front with a line of still-water ponds for shipping purposes, his justification for this expenditure being that the North River piers would "raise the price of every lot 25 x 100 feet west of Broadway $5,000 at a jump."¹ "Millions to benefit landowners and shippers, but not a dollar for the unemployed hungry!" exclaimed the Anti-Monopolists. Alderman Bruen, another Whig, at a time when the fall in the value of real estate in New York City alone exceeded $50,000,000, suggested the underwriting by the city to the speculators for the sum of $5,000,000, to take in pledge the lands they had bought and to give them the bonds of the city for two-thirds their value. To the Equal Rights men there was not much difference between the Tammany Hall and the Whig leaders. Both, it was plain, sweated the people for their own private interests, although the Whigs, inheriting the Federalist idea that property was the sole test of merit, did not flaunt their undying concern for the laborer so persistently as did the Wigwam.

The city in 1837 was filled with the homeless and unemployed. Rent was high, and provisions were dear. Cattle speculators had possession of nearly all the stock, and a barrel of flour cost $12. On February 12 a crowd met in the City Hall Park, after which over 200 of them sped to the flour warehouse of Eli Hart & Co., on Washington street. This firm and that of S. B. Herrick & Son, it was known, held a monopoly in the scarce supply of flour and wheat. The doors of Hart's place were battered down, and nearly 500 barrels of flour and 1,000 barrels of wheat were taken out and strewed in the street. Herrick's place likewise was mobbed.¹ On May 10, when the banks suspended specie payments, a vast and excited crowd gathered in Wall Street, and a riot was narrowly averted.²

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1836, No. 80.

Equal Rights Leaders Arrested.

The Equal Rights party could not be bought out or snuffed out. To deprive it of its best leaders Tammany Hall resorted to petty persecution. Jacques and Slamm had headed a petition to the Legislature protesting against the appointment of a certain suspicious bank investigating committee. The Wigwam men in the Legislature immediately secured the passage of a resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate this petition, and this committee instantly haled Jacques and Slamm to appear at Albany and give testimony.³ The purpose was plain. The Tammany men sought to have the Equal Rights leaders at Albany, which was not as accessible from the city as now, and there keep them under various pretexts while the Spring campaign for Mayor was going on. Jacques and Slamm did not appear and were adjudged guilty of contempt. When they were most needed in New York City they were arrested and arraigneded before the Legislature. William Leggett also was threatened, but escaped arrest.

¹ Documents of the Board of Alderman, 1839, No. 29.

² Ibid.

³ Documents of the Assembly, 1837, Nos. 198 and 827.

Tammany Defeated.

The Equal Rights party, however, was soon to demonstrate its capacity to do harm to Tammany. The organization nominated John J. Morgan for Mayor; the Whigs named Aaron Clark, and the Equal Rights party opposed them with Jacques. The 3,911 votes Jacques received were enough to defeat Morgan, with his 12,974 votes, against Clark's 16,140. Worst blow of all, Tammany Hall lost the Common Council. When the new body came in it removed all of the Wigwam's office-holders that it could. The spoils in the form of annual salaries paid by the city, amounting to $468,000; the perquisites and contracts—such as that for the Croton Aqueduct, in favor of which the people had voted some years before—and other improvements, all went to the Whigs.

The Tammany men, regarding the Equal Rights men responsible for this loss of power, were now disposed to treat with them and willing enough to throw over the banker-corporation element.

CHAPTER XIII.

TAMMANY "PURIFIED."

1837-1838.

One of the important changes in the composition of Tammany Hall came in 1837. The United States Bank dependents, lobbyists and supporters had left the Wigwam, as has been noted, in 1832, but the State Bank men, well satisfied with the destruction of the great rival corporation, had remained. Finding the organization no longer subservient to them they, in turn, quit Tammany during Van Buren's administration.

State Bank Men Overpowered.

This happened in the Fall of 1837. The Tammany General Committee, whose membership had recently been increased from thirty-six to fifty-one members, held a meeting on September 7, thirty-six members being present. Resolutions were offered upholding Van Buren's scheme of placing the United States funds in sub-treasuries. This was a bitter dose to the State Bank men who, wanting to retain Government deposits, opposed the sub-treasury plan. The "bank conservatives" vainly tried to put off a vote on the resolutions, but being repeatedly outvoted, all but one of them left the room before the main question was put. Nineteen members remained. As seventeen formed a quorum, the question was put and the resolutions were adopted by a vote of 18 to 1. The bank men pretended that the resolutions were passed clandestinely, and they so deviously managed things that in a few days they regained control of the general committee, which at their behest refused to call a public meeting to act on the resolutions.

But the Democratic-Republican Young Men's Committee was saturated with Equal Rights ideas and rebelled at the policy which allowed the acts of the bankers to antagonize Democrats of principle and bring defeat to Tammany Hall. This committee met in the Wigwam on September 11 and passed a series of resolutions with which the Anti-Monopolists were as pleased as the bankers were angry. The resolutions declared the public satisfaction in anticipating the separation of bank and state, and welcomed the approach of an era when legislation should not be perverted to the enrichment of a few and the depression of the many. The Young Men resolved that the crisis was sufficient reason for their committee assuming to recommend a public meeting of those who approved Van Buren's recent message, to be held in Tammany Hall, on September 21.

The bank men were angry that the Young Men's committee should dare to act independently of the elder, the general committee. The latter, meeting on September 14, disapproved of the manner in which the Young Men's meeting had been called, declined co-operation with it, and by a vote of 21 to 16 ordered the Young Men's General Committee to withdraw the recommendation for that meeting. The Young Men ignored the order and held their meeting. Van Buren and his prospective sub-treasuries were indorsed and fiery resolutions adopted denouncing the incorporated banks.

Coming, as this denunciation did, from Tammany

Hall, which had a far-reaching influence over the Union, the "bank conservatives" grew even more exasperated, for they had come to look upon the organization as almost their private property. As two-thirds of the Sachems belonged to their clique, they held a meeting in the Wigwam, on September 25, to disapprove of the sub-treasury scheme. It rushed the progressive Democrats in overwhelming force, and for an hour the place was a fighting arena. The bank men were forced to leave, and the progressives organized and carried out the meeting.

Fusion with Equal Rights Men.

Regarding Tammany as having ceased to be the tool of the exploiting interests, the Anti-Monopolists were disposed to a union with the advanced organization party. When the Equal Rights men met at Military Hall on October 27, Col. Alexander Ming, Jr., one of the party's organizers, said that one of the chief purposes of the Equal Rights party was to effect reform in Tammany Hall; this, having been accomplished, it was the duty of every Democrat to unite on one ticket against the "high-toned Federalists, Whigs and aristocrats." A fusion Assembly ticket was made up, composed of both Tammany and Equal Rights men, each Tammanyite subscribing in writing to the Equal Rights principles. A small contingent of the Equal Rights party, however, accused their comrades of selling out to the Wigwam, and nominated their own candidates—Job Haskell, Daniel Gorham, William E. Skidmore and others.

The "bank conservatives" allied themselves with the Whigs. They were credited with raising an election fund of $60,000, a sum which at that time could do great execution. By raising the cries of "agrarianism" and "infidelity," ascribing the effects of the panic of 1837 to the Democrats, coercing laborers and using illegal votes, the combined conservatives wrested nearly 3,000 majority out of a total of 33,093 votes.

Sachems Shut Out Both Factions.

Stimulated by this victory, the bank men attempted to regain control of Tammany and called a meeting for January 2, 1838, at 7 o'clock, in the Wigwam. The Anti-Bank Democrats then issued a call for a meeting on the same night, but one hour earlier. The Council of Sachems were mostly either "bank conservatives" themselves or sympathizers; but they feared to alienate the dominant progressives. As the best solution, they agreed that neither party should meet in the Wigwam. On January 1 they resolved that both calls were unauthorized and that neither had been sanctioned by any act of the general committee. "The lease of Tammany Hall," read their resolution, "reserves to the Council of Sachems of the Tammany Society the right to decide on all questions of doubt, arising out of the rooms being occupied by or let to a person or persons as a committee or otherwise for political purposes!" The Council sent a copy of these resolutions to Lovejoy and Howard, the lessees¹ of Tammany Hall, forbidding them to "rent, hire to, or allow either of the assemblages named on the premises." Identical with this decree, Lovejoy and Howard issued a notice (which was published in the public prints) that their lease of Tammany Hall "contained covenants" that they would not permit any persons to assemble in the hall "whose political opinions the Council of Sachems of Tammany Society should declare not to be in accordance with the political views of the general committee of said Tammany Society," and they (Lovejoy and Howard) therefore could not permit either meeting.¹ The conservatives then met in the City Hall Park, where they were assaulted and maltreated.²

¹ It will be remembered that in 1828 the Sachems had bought back a lease on the building in order to shut out the Adams men. The lease had again been let, but under restrictions which left the Sachems the power to determine what faction should be entitled to the use of the hall.

Anti-Bank Men Control.

The Anti-Bank men won over the general committee, which gave the necessary permission for their meeting in the Wigwam on January 9. The policy of Jackson and of Van Buren was upheld, and it was set forth that while the Democracy, unlike its calumniators, did not arrogate to itself "the possession of all the decency, the virtue, the morals and the wealth of the community," it felt no more disturbed at being called "Agrarians," "Locofocos" or "Radicals" than it did at being abused in the days of Jefferson.

That foremost Equal Rights advocate, the Evening Post, now acknowledged the purification of Tammany

¹ These details are of the greatest importance as revealing the methods by which the society asserted its absolute ascendancy over the organization. They proved the absurdity of the claim that the two bodies were distinct and separate from each other.

² The New Yorker (magazine), January 18, 1888. This journal was edited and published by Horace Greeley.

Hall;¹ saying that the spurious Democrats who had infested the party for their own selfish purposes had either been drummed out of the ranks, had left voluntarily, or had acquiesced sullenly in the decision of the majority.

¹ January 11, 1838. The credit for this temporary purification must in considerable measure be given to the Post's editors, William Cullen Bryant and William Leggett.

CHAPTER XIV.

WHIG FAILURE RESTORES TAMMANY TO POWER.

1838-1840.

The course of the Whig city administration served only to strengthen Tammany and was responsible for the conviction, which later so often prevailed, that if Tammany Hall was bad the Whigs were no better, and were perhaps worse. At this time of general distress complaints were numerous that the sum of $1,300,000 was exacted from the rentpayers in a single year. In the early part of 1838 one-third of all the persons in New York City who subsisted by manual labor was substantially or wholly without employment.¹ Not less than 10,000 persons were in utter poverty and had no other means of surviving the Winter than those afforded by the charity of neighbors. The Almshouse and all charitable institutions were full to overflowing; the usual agencies of charity were exhausted or insufficient, and 10,000 sufferers were still uncared for. The great panic of 1837 had cut down the city's trade one-half. Notwithstanding the fall of prices, the rents for tenements in New York were greater than were paid in any other city or village upon the globe.² So exorbitant were the demands of the landlords that the tenants found it impossible to meet them. The landowners were the backbone of the Whig party; it was not unnatural, therefore, that their rapacity developed among the people at large a profound distrust of Whig men and principles.

¹ The New Yorker, January 20, 1838.

² Ibid., February 17, 1838. James Parton, in his biography of Horace Greeley, attributes the latter's conversion and lifelong devotion to Socialist principles in large part to the frightful sufferings which he witnessed in New York City, in the Winter of 1838.

The Whig officials, so far as can be discovered, took no adequate steps to relieve the widespread suffering. The Tammany ward committees, on the other hand, were active in relief work. This was another of the secrets of Tammany Hall's usual success in holding the body of voters. The Whigs made fine speeches over champagne banquets, but kept at a distance from the poor, among whom the Wigwam workers mingled, and distributed clothing, fuel and food and often money. The leaders set the example. One of these was John M. Bloodgood,¹ who frequently went among the charitable citizens, collecting, in a large basket, cakes, pies, meat and other eatables, and distributing them among the needy.

Whig Election Frauds.

In the Spring of 1838 Tammany nominated Isaac L. Varian for Mayor, and the Whigs renominated Aaron Clark. The Whigs used the panic as an example of the result of Democratic rule. Controlling the city, they employed all its machinery to win. It was reasonably certain that they did not stop at fraud. In some wards canvassing was delayed until other wards were heard from. In still other wards the Whigs refused to administer the oath to naturalized citizens. With all this they obtained a plurality of only 519 out of 39,341 votes. Had it not been for dissensions in the tumultuous Sixth Ward, Tammany would have won.

¹ Bloodgood was the son of Abraham Bloodgood, one of the earliest Tammany politicians. The son likewise achieved considerable influence in the organization. He was for a long time a Police Justice. He will be met with again toward the end of this chapter.

In the Fall election of 1838 the Whig frauds were enormous and indisputable. The Whigs raised large sums of money, which were handed to ward workers for the procuring of votes. About two hundred roughs were brought from Philadelphia, in different divisions, each man receiving $22. Gen. Robert Swartwout, now a Whig, at the instance of such men as Moses H. Grinnell, Robert C. Wetmore and Noah Cook, former Wigwam lights, who left the Hall because the "destructionist" Anti-Monopolists captured it, arranged for the trip of these fraudulent voters. After having voted in as many wards as possible, each was to receive the additional compensation of $5. They were also to pass around spurious tickets purporting to be Democratic. The aggregate Whig vote, it was approximated, was swelled through the operations of this band by at least five to six hundred.¹ One repeater, Charles Swint, voted in sixteen wards. Such inmates of the House of Detention as could be persuaded or bullied into voting the Whig ticket were set at large. Merritt, a police officer, was seen boldly leading a crowd of them to the polls. Ex-convicts distributed Whig tickets and busily electioneered. The cabins of all the vessels along the wharves were ransacked, and every man, whether or not a citizen or resident of New York, who could be wheedled into voting a Whig ballot, was rushed to the polls and his vote was smuggled in. The Whigs were successful, their candidate for Governor, William H. Seward, receiving 20,179 votes, to 19,377 for William L. Marcy.

¹ Confession of Hart Marks, one of the leaders, before Justice Lowndes in the lower Police Court, November 6, 1838, and of Jonathan D. Stevenson and others in the Recorder's Court, October 20, 1840.

Tammany Deplores Whig Corruption.

Departing from its custom of seeking local victory on national issues, Tammany, in April, 1839, issued an address expatiating on the increase of the city expenses from a little over $1,000,000 in 1830 to above $5,000,000 in 1838. Deducting about $1,500,000 for the Croton works, there would still remain the enormous increase of $2,500,000. The city population had not trebled in that time, nor had there been any extraordinary cause for expenditure. Where had all this money gone?

Tammany further pointed out that, unlike the Whigs, it had never stooped so low as to discharge the humble laborers in the public service, when it (Tammany) held the Common Council. Nor had it ever been so abject as to provide them with colored tickets, as the Whigs had done, so that the laborers might be detected if they voted contrary to their masters. Tammany further charged that the Whigs in the previous election had taken the Almshouse paupers, with embossed satin voting tickets in their hands, to the polls, and were planning to do it again.

Tammany made good use of this charge. But the practice was not exclusively a Whig industry. In those years both Democrats and Whigs, according to which held power, forced Almshouse paupers to vote. For a fortnight before the election the paupers were put in training. On the morning of election they were disguised with new clothing, so that the public might not see their gray uniforms. They were given tickets to vote "and tickets for grog, silver coin and also good advice as to their conduct at the polls." Then they were carried to the polls in stages, with an officer on each step to see that none escaped. Many would return to the Almshouse drunk and with torn clothing, or after having exchanged their new garments for liquor.¹ There were usually about 300 paupers. In the Fall and Winter of 1838 a quarter of the population was relieved at the Almshouse.

Tammany Elects Varian.

Clark and Varian were both renominated for Mayor in the Spring of 1839. Preparations for fraud on a large scale were made by both parties. The newspapers supporting Varian admitted that Tammany thought proper to follow the Whigs' example, and to counteract its effects, by colonizing the doubtful wards with Democratic voters. On both sides repeating was general. An Albany police officer named Coulson brought twenty-three persons, one of whom was only seventeen years old, to New York City, where they voted the Whig ticket in the different wards. For this they received $5 in advance, and $1 a day.

Of the 41,113 votes Varian² received 21,072, and

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1844-45, XI, No. 51.

² Varian was a rugged, popular, but not over-educated man. Sir Charles Lyell, the noted British geologist, once asked him questions as to the formation of Manhattan Island. Varian said he had dug a well on his farm at Murray Hill and after going through "a strategem of sand and a strategem of clay they struck a strategem of red rock." At another time, while read-

Clark 20,005. The Wigwam secured a majority of 12 in the Common Council.

Contest Over the Registration Bill.

Fearing that Tammany in power would use the administration machinery in elections even more than had the Whigs, the latter now made a great outcry for a registry law,¹ proclaiming it the only fraud preventive. The sudden conversion of the Whig leaders to civic purity called forth derision. But the people at large, the non-politicians, ashamed of such barefaced frauds in their city, took up the agitation. The Registry bill was introduced in the Legislature in May, 1839. It provided for the registration of voters in New York City, and made fraudulent voting a felony, with severe penalties.

After the frauds of 1834 the Wigwam leaders had given out that they would take serious steps to obtain from the Legislature a law causing voters to be registered, but had done nothing. They now opened a campaign against the Whig bill. In the Spring of 1840 the ward committees declared against it on the pretexts that it interfered with constitutional rights; that it was an ining a New York newspaper at the Stanwix House in Albany, Varian remarked to Walter Bowne, then Mayor, that they had a new Street Inspector in New York City. "Indeed! who is he?" "A perfect stranger," replied Varian; and he read from the paper: "'Last evening the wind suddenly changed to the north, and this morning, thanks to Old Boreas, our streets are in a passable condition.' Old Boreas," said Varian, reflectively: "I thought I knew every Democrat in New York, but I never heard of him."

¹ In 1834 the Board of Assistant Aldermen had passed a resolution in favor of the registry of voters, and the Native American Association, early in 1838, had petitioned the Legislature similarly. The Whigs seized hold of the movement as political capital for themselves.

sidious attempt to take from the poor man either his right of suffrage or to make the exercise of that right so inconvenient as practically to debar him from voting. The Common Council, on March 16, 1840, denounced the proposed law as inquisitorial, tyrannical and disfranchising in its effect, as well as unjust, because they (the Aldermen) "know of no sin which she (New York City) has committed to make her worthy of the signal reproach now sought to be cast upon her."¹ A few days later the Common Council on joint ballot delivered itself of a solemn protest against the constitutionality of the Registry bill, and on the night of March 24 an assemblage in the Wigwam did likewise. It was in this year that the full account of the Whig frauds of 1838 was made public. Commenting upon this, the Tammany Nominating Committee, with characteristic naïveté, said in its address: "It is with shame that we record these dark transactions and proclaim them to the people. We would, if we could, blot out their existence, for it brings disgrace on our whole country and will make the enemies of civil freedom laugh with joy."

The Registry bill became a law, but Tammany continued to protest against it. When, in 1841, the Legislature increased the penalties for its violation, Acting Mayor Elijah F. Purdy commented upon it severely.²

Death of William Leggett.

The able, sincere and high-minded William Leggett, the guiding spirit of the Equal Rights party, died on May 29, 1839, not quite forty years old. The Tammany Young Men's General Committee eulogized his virtues and talents, proclaimed him amongst the purest of politicians and announced the purpose of raising a monument to his memory. Of this committee, curious to relate, the chairman was Fernando Wood and the secretary Richard B. Connolly—two men who became known for anything but devotion to the virtues they here exalted.

¹ Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, XVIII: 404-5.

² Ibid., XX, 229-30.

Leggett, some years before this, had become a radical Abolitionist. By this time the anti-slavery movement in the city and State had grown to considerable proportions, though as yet it had exercised but little influence on politics. Several riots had taken place in the streets of the city, two rather serious ones happening on July 9 and 10, 1834, and June 21, 1835, and Lewis Tappan, an anti-slavery propagandist, had been mobbed. The local movement gradually acquired new adherents, and constantly increased its propaganda.

More Disclosures.

During this period another great series of disclosures regarding Tammany chieftains was made public. Samuel Swartwout, whom Jackson had made Collector of the Port shortly after coming into office in 1829, fled from the city late in 1838. He had long been a power in the organization. His name had been mentioned unpleasantly when he, with M. M. Noah and Henry Ogden,¹ contrived by means of their official positions to get $10,000 reward for the recovery of the jewels stolen from the ¹ Ogden was a Tammany politician of considerable importance. At the time of Swartwout's flight he was the Cashier of the Custom House, a post which he had held for several years. He was also a director of the Seventh Ward Bank.

Prince of Orange, though the recovery had been made by others. And in 1833 he had threatened, as Collector of the Port, to remove the Custom House uptown because the merchants would not lend him more than $7,000 on the strength of some worthless "Jersey meadows." Three years later he was connected with the unsavory Harlem Railroad stock corner and the manipulation of the funds of the Commercial Bank. Early in 1838 he joined forces with the notorious politicians of the Seventh Ward Bank for the defeat of William Leggett for the Democratic nomination for Congress, securing the nomination of Isaac L. Varian in his stead. A few months later the city was astounded to learn that since 1830 he had been systematically robbing the Government, through the manipulation of Custom House receipts, and that the total of his thefts amounted to nearly $1,250,000.¹ Fleeing to Europe, he wandered aimlessly about² for many years.³ The community was so impressed with the size of this defalcation that a verb, "to Swartwout," was coined, remaining in general use for many years thereafter. A defaulter was generally spoken of as having "Swartwouted."

A lesser figure in Tammany circles, though a person of considerable consequence, followed Swartwout in ¹ The exact amount was $1,222,705.69. House Executive Document, No. 13, Twenty-fifth Congress, Third Session; also House Report, No. 313.

² A pathetic tale is told of an American meeting Swartwout in Algiers, several years after this episode, and of the defaulter crying like a child over his enforced exile from the land of his birth.

³ Jesse Hoyt, another Sachem, succeeded Swartwout as Collector of the Port. Hoyt was charged, about this time, with having defaulted in the sum of $30,000 in dealings with certain Wall Street brokers. The Superior Court Judgment flight. This was William M. Price, at the time District Attorney for the Southern District of New York. It was discovered that he had defaulted to the Government in the sum of $75,000. Price, like so many other Tammany politicians of his time, had been mixed up with Seventh Ward Bank politics. During the latter part of his career he had been known as the personal representative in the city of President Van Buren.

During the following Spring, William Paxen Hallett, a member of the "Big Four" against whom the Equal Rights party had so energetically protested in 1836, was made the defendant in a civil suit involving grave fraud. As referee in a suit for damages of one John A. Manning against one Charles J. Morris, Hallett had wrongfully reported that only trifling judgments remained outstanding against Morris, and the court had accordingly given the latter a year's time in which to make good a judgment for $3,496 rendered in favor of Manning. It appeared, however, in the proceedings before the Superior Court, May 20, 1839, that Hallett knew, or should have known, of a previous judgment against the defendant for $15,014.44 in favor of one Nathan Davis, who during the year of grace seized upon all of Morris's property, thus defrauding Manning. The testimony was so convincing that Hallett was forced to compromise the suit by paying the damages asked for. Through the influence of the organization, however, he escaped prosecution.

Roll for 1839-40 records two judgments against him, secured by Effingham H. Warner, one for $10,000 and one for $5,747.72. Both judgments were satisfied within a few years after his assumption of the Collectorship of the Port.

The "ring" of Police Justices had for several years been a crying scandal. Whig and Tammany magistrates were equally involved. Public clamor fixed upon John M. Bloodgood, despite his private charities, as the first victim. The Assistant Aldermen impeached him in January, 1839,¹ and submitted the case to the Court of Common Pleas, by whom he was tried.² Testimony was brought out tending to show that the Police Justices, by means of an understanding with policemen and jailers, extorted money from prisoners and shielded counterfeiters, thieves, street walkers and other malefactors from arrest or conviction. The charges were dismissed.³ Stronger testimony of the same kind was brought out in May, 1840, on the trial of Police Justice Henry W. Merritt, and other testimony involved in the same way Special Justice Oliver M. Lowndes. The case, however, was dismissed.⁴

A strong public agitation had been waged for the reorganization of the criminal courts. The Weekly Herald

¹ See "Articles of Impeachment," Journal and Documents of the Board of Assistant Aldermen, 1839, Vol. XIII, No. 12 and No. 25.

² Court Minutes, New York Common Pleas, record of February 19 and 20, 1839. (These records are neither paged nor indexed.) The Common Pleas of this time was popularly known as the Mayor's Court; and the Judges were the Mayor, Recorder and certain Aldermen. The present Court of Common Pleas was not established until 1856.

³ A curious reason for the dismissal was given in the decision of the Judges. It was that the charges had not been individually sworn to. It appeared, therefore, that the Board of Assistant Aldermen, acting in its official capacity in formulating impeachment proceedings, was not a recognizable party before the Court of Common Pleas.

⁴ Journal and Documents of the Board of Assistant Aldermen, 1839-40, Vol. XV, No. 71. The reason for dismissing these charges was identical with that given in the case of of February 1, 1840, had made the statement that the farce of conducting the correctional machinery of the city involved a yearly sum of $1,360,564—this sum being the total of judges', policemen's and court attendants' salaries (about $50,000), added to the blackmail exacted from offenders, and various "pickings and stealings." The statement was an extravagant one; $700,000 would have been nearer the mark. But whatever the sum, the acquittal of the Police Justices by their fellows in judicial evil-doing indicated that the carnival was to continue. The Tammany leaders had been "out" for the two years 1837-38, and were now vigorously making hay while the sun shone, while such of their Whig contemporaries as still held office were vying with the chiefs in systematic and organized plundering.

The Manhattan Bank scandals were made public in February, 1840. This was the bank whose charter Aaron Burr had so ingeniously secured in 1799. It had been a Tammany institution from the beginning, and Tammany politicians had ruled its policies. It was now generally regarded as the leading financial institution in the city, rivalled only by the Bank of America. It carried $600,000 of Government funds on deposit, and, of course, a large city and State fund.

It was now shown that for years it had loaned large sums to Tammany leaders and to family connections of its directors and officials, and that it had spent other large sums for political purposes. The total of its worthless loans and political expenditures reached the enormous sum of $1,344,266.99. Cashier Campbell P. White, tried on the technical charge of stealing several of the bank's books, was freed through the disagreement of the jury,¹ but on a second trial, charged with assaulting Jonathan Thompson, a Tammany director of the bank who had criticized his management, he was fined $250 and imprisoned for fifteen days.² In the midst of the excitement Colin G. Newcomb, the teller, disappeared with $50,000. That the bank weathered the storm well-nigh reaches the dimensions of a miracle. Paulding, twice a Tammany Mayor; Bowne, another Tammany ex-Mayor; and Robert H. Morris, at that time Recorder, appeared as the defendant's attorneys in the first trial. White was an influential Wigwam chief, and in 1832 had been elected to Congress on the Tammany ticket.

Bloodgood. A statement of the case is given in the report of District Attorney James R. Whiting to the Board of Aldermen during this year. See Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, 1840, Vol. XIX: 185-87. The Common Pleas volume for 1840 is missing from its place in the County Court Building.

¹ Session Minutes, 1840.

² Ibid.

CHAPTER XV.

RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE "GANGS."

1840-1846.

About the year 1840 the change in the personnel and the policy of the Wigwam became distinctly evident. After its absorption of the Equal Rights party, the organization had remained "purified" for a year or so, and then, as usual, had relapsed. But a new power and new ideas prevailed. No longer did the bankers and merchants who once held the Wigwam in their grasp, venture to meet in the secret chamber of the hall and order nominations, command policies or determine the punishment of refractory individuals. Tammany from this time forward began to be ruled from the bottom of the social stratum, instead of from the top.

Tammany and the Aliens.

Something had to be done to offset the disclosures of 1838-40. Accordingly, the policy of encouraging the foreigners, first rather mildly started in 1823, was now developed into a system. The Whigs antagonized the entrance of foreign-born citizens into politics, and the Native American party was organized expressly to bar them almost entirely from the enjoyment of political rights. The immigrant had no place to which to turn but Tammany Hall. In part to assure to itself this vote the organization opened a bureau, a modest beginning of what became a colossal department. An office was established in the Wigwam, to which specially paid agents or organization runners brought the immigrant, drilled into him the advantages of joining Tammany and furnished him with the means and legal machinery needed to take out his naturalization papers. Between January 14 and April 1, 1840, 895 of these men were taken before Tammany Marine Court Judges and naturalized. Judges of other courts helped to swell the total. Nearly every one of these aliens became and remained an inveterate organization voter. Tammany took the immigrant in charge, cared for him, made him feel that he was a human being with distinct political rights, and converted him into a citizen. How sagacious this was, each year revealed. Immigration soon poured in heavily, and there came a time when the foreign vote outnumbered that of the native-born citizens.¹

The Whigs were bewildered at this systematic gathering in of the naturalized citizens. After the election of April, 1840,² when Tammany re-elected Varian Mayor and carried the Common Council, the Committee of Whig Young Men³ issued a long address on the subject. After specifically charging that prisoners had been marched from their cells in the City Prison by their jailers to the polls to vote the Tammany ticket, the address declared that during the week previous to, and on election day, naturalization papers had been granted at the Marine Court on tickets from Tammany Hall, under circumstances of great abuse.

¹ The statement was made at a reform meeting in City Hall Park on April 11, 1844, that from 1841 to 1844 no less than 11,000 foreigners had been naturalized at $1 a head, though the legal fee was $5. The Judges, the speaker said on the authority of Judge Vanderpoel, signed their names to the papers without asking questions.

² This was the first election in the city occupying only one day. Before 1840 three days were used. The vote stood: Varian, 21,248; J. Phillips Phoenix (Whig), 19,622; scattering, 86; total, 40,901.

³ The Whigs had formed committees in imitation of the Tammany organization.

The Wigwam Wins for Van Buren.

In the campaign of 1840 the so-called best elements of the town were for Gen. Harrison. The Wigwam men had much at stake in Van Buren's candidature and exerted themselves to re-elect him. Tammany now elaborated its naturalization bureau. A committee sat daily at the Wigwam, assisting in the naturalization process, free of charge to the applicant. The allegiance of foreign-born citizens was further assured by humoring their national pride in the holding of Irish, German and French meetings in the hall, where each nationality was addressed in its own language. The more influential foreigners were rewarded with places on the Assembly or local ticket, and to the lesser workers of foreign birth were given petty jobs in the department offices, or contract work.

The outcome was, that in the face of especially strong opposition Tammany harvested 982 plurality in the city for Van Buren, though the vote of the Western counties gave Harrison the electoral vote of the State. It was such instances as this—demonstrating its capacity of swaying New York City even if the rest of the State voted oppositely—that continued to give Tammany Hall a powerful hold on the Democratic party of the nation, notwithstanding the discredit that so often attached to Tammany men and measures.

The Originator of the "Gang."

Another example of the change in the personnel of Tammany was shown in the rise and progress of the "ward heeler" and his "gangs." The "gangs" were not conspicuous in 1841, when the organization elected Robert H. Morris Mayor.¹ In April, 1842, when Morris was re-elected,² the "gangs" were still modestly in the background. But in the Fall of that year they came forth in their might.

One of their leaders was "Mike" Walsh, who became a sort of example for the professional "ward heelers" that followed in his wake. Walsh had no claim at all on the ruling politicians at the Wigwam, and would have been unnoticed by them. But he was ambitious, did not lack ability of a certain kind, and had a retinue of devoted "plug-ugly" followers. He spoke with a homely eloquence, which captivated the poor of his ward. The turbulent he won over with his fists. On November 1 the Tammany Nominating Committee reported to the great popular meeting. Walsh, with the express purpose of forcing his own nomination for the Assembly, went there with such a band of shouters and fighters as never before had been seen in the hall. His "shoulder-hitters"—men, as a rule, of formidable appearance—did such hearty execution and so overawed the men assembled there, that upon the question being put to a vote the general committee decided in his favor and placed his name on the regular ticket.

¹ Election of 1841: Robert H. Morris (Tammany), 18,605; J. Phillips Phoenix (Whig), 18,206; Samuel F. B. Morse, 77; scattering, 45; total, 86,938.

² Election of 1842: Morris, 20,633; Phoenix, 18,755; total, 89,388.

While in the ensuing election he received not quite 3,000 votes to the nearly 20,000 cast for his opponent (the nominee first reported by the committee), he eventually was successful in his aim. Seeing how easy it was to force nominations at the Wigwam if backed by force, other men began to imitate him and get together "gangs" of their own.

This was the kind of men who, with their "gangs," superseded the former Democratic ward committees, nearly every member of which kept a shop or earned his living in some legitimate calling. By helping one another in introducing "gangs" of repeaters from one ward to another at the primary elections, the "ward heelers" became the masters of the wards and were then graduated into leaders, whose support was sought by the most dignified and illustrious politicians.

Turbulence of the City.

In fact, the city was frequently in a state of turmoil. Since 1834 there had been half a dozen riots.¹ There were constant fights between rival volunteer engine companies, to which lawless and abandoned characters attached themselves. Engines were stolen, clubs, pipes, wrenches and other weapons were used, and the affrays generally closed with stabbings and broken skulls.² There was no police force to speak of; even Mayor Morris, whom the "gangs" called "Bob" and tapped familiarly on the shoulder, described it as "lamentably defective."¹ One out of every twenty-one white persons in the city could not read and write.² From so large a population of illiterates, the "ward heelers" easily recruited great numbers of followers. Morris allowed the "gangs" full sway, and was popular accordingly.

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1839, No. 29. The Weekly Herald, February 15, 1840, stated that official documents showed, for the previous ten months, a total of nineteen riots, twenty-three murders and nearly 150 fires, the latter involving a loss of about $7,000,000.

² See Documents of the Board of Aldermen, VIII, No 35, and No. 41, 1843-44, for extended accounts.

More Disclosures.

General disgust at the low character of politics was felt by the independents, who rightly held both Tammany and the Whigs responsible. During the time each party held power, affairs had gone from bad to worse. A joint special committee of Aldermen, appointed under public pressure, reported, in 1842, that dishonest office-holders had recently robbed the city of little short of $100,000.³ A street cleaning contract was awarded for $64,500 a year, for five years, when other responsible persons offered to take it for not quite $25,000 a year.⁴ The fraudulent selling of city land to cover up the increasing debt was continued.⁵ The city office-holders sold real estate for unpaid assessments, frequently without giving notice to the owner, and bought it in themselves and so "possessed themselves of estates."⁶ Heavy and oppressive assessments for improvements never actually made were laid on the taxpayers.⁷ Hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended uselessly and extravagantly.⁸ Mayor Morris complained that he had no power

¹ Mayor Morris's Message, July, 1842.

² Documents of the Board of Aldermen, VIII, No. 22.

³ Ibid., 1842-43, No. 5.

⁴ Ibid., IX, No. 69. ⁵ Ibid., X, part 1, No. 46.

⁶ Senate Documents, 1842, IV., No. 100. ⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Message of Mayor Morris, 1843.

over expenditures; that he knew nothing of legislative action on public works until the warrants for payment were sent to him.¹ In violation of the charter, the Aldermen participated in all the profitable "jobs."²

Convicts were allowed to escape from Blackwell's Island on condition that they voted as their keepers ordered them.³ Prisoners whose terms had expired were kept at the public expense until election day, to get their votes. The inmates of the Almshouse and the Penitentiary were forced to manufacture articles for the use and profit of the officers of those departments. "It is a well-known fact to all who have been familiar with those establishments," declared the Almshouse Commissioners, "that large quantities of cabinet furniture, clothing and sometimes elegant carriages, cut-glass decanters, punch-bowls, and other articles have been made at the expense of the city; and this has been carried on more or less for years."⁴ It was the custom of the officers "to expend large sums in sumptuous and costly dinners for the entertainment of partisans." Persons confined in the City Prison were frequently swindled out of their money or effects by the officers, or by "shyster" lawyers, acting in connivance with the jailers; and to get a mere note or message delivered to friends they had to pay an exorbitant price.⁵

Morris Elected for the Third Time.

Despite the disclosures, Tammany again elected Morris, in April, 1843, by nearly 5,000 plurality, he receiving 24,395 votes to 19,516 for Robert Smith, the Whig candidate. The storm, however, was gathering, both in and out of Tammany. Inside the organization, charges were common of monstrous frauds in the primaries. Frauds against the Whigs were acceptable enough, but by Democrats against Democrats were intolerable. So pronounced was the outcry over these frauds that the Tammany General Committee, in the Fall of 1843, directed that in future the ward meetings should be held on the same night and that only those whose names appeared on the poll lists should be allowed to vote.¹

¹ Message of Mayor Morris, 1843. ² Ibid.

³ Report of Commissioners of the Almshouse. Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XI, No. 40. ⁴ Ibid.: 400.

⁵ Ibid.; see also presentment of Grand Jury, Ibid., X, part 1, No. 53.

Combination Against Tammany.

Outside criticism materialized in an independent reform movement. It found a rallying point in the Native American or American Republican party, which previously had polled about 9,000 votes. It resented the intrusion of foreigners into politics, large numbers of whom had secured office. It was partially industrial in its character and following; numbers of American workingmen believed that with 100,000 immigrants * pouring into this country every year they would soon have to be satisfied with a shilling or twenty cents a day for their labor, instead of the $1.50 they were receiving. The native element also complained of the organization of the Irish into a distinct and separate element, with a ¹ About this time the general committee was enlarged. Until now the delegates had been selected from each ward. In 1843 the practice was begun of sending them from each election district.

* Sixty thousand of these entered the port of New York yearly. The total immigration rose to 154,000 in 1846 and to 427,000 in 1854.

high Roman Catholic prelate at its head, in order to get part of the public school funds. The discussion of the public school question only the more accentuated hatreds, bringing to the surface the most delicate questions touching the religious feelings and prejudices of the major part of the community.

Tammany nominated Jonathan L. Coddington for Mayor, and placed very few naturalized citizens on its ticket. The Native American candidate was James Harper, and the Whig, Morris Franklin.

Mayor Morris called a meeting in Tammany Hall at which resolutions were passed denouncing the Common Council for its corruption and its failure to carry out reform. The advocates of the new party declared that they were not to be deceived. Their campaign was carried on with vigor. Honest men generally were roused against both Tammany and the Whigs. Religious and racial vituperation were partially cast aside and forgotten for the time when the reform men took hold of the movement; not wholly so, however, for we find one of the chief native orators declaring in a campaign speech that "the American Republicans will not be found with Roman Catholics in the same ranks." This bigotry was overlooked, inasmuch as the Native Americans promised city reform, good police, reductions in taxes, clean streets and economical expenditure of the public money. The community was pervaded by a profound sense of the corruption and inefficiency of the old parties, and ordinary political lines were forgotten.

Tammany made desperate efforts to carry the election. On the preceding night, convicts in batches of twenty and thirty were taken from Blackwell's Island to New York, where they were lodged, and the next day given Democratic ballots, free lunch and in some instances were employed to electioneer.¹

The Native Americans won, however, the vote standing : Harper, 24,606; Coddington, 20,726; Franklin, 5,207.

The New Administration a Disappointment.

The new administration was a distinct disappointment. Though it had a majority in the Common Council, it accomplished few or none of the reforms its supporters had promised. The scramble for office continued as before ; municipal improvements progressed slowly, and though salaries and appropriations were cut to some extent, taxes and expenditures increased. A part of this increase was doubtless justified, but the people had been promised reduction, and they refused to take into account the fiscal needs of a rapidly growing city. The administration further weakened its hold by passing and enforcing stringent "blue laws." Not only were the unfortunate women of the streets warred upon and quiet drinking places raided, but irritating measures, such as the prohibiting of fireworks on the Fourth of July and the driving of apple women and other vendors from the streets, were taken. The result was a public reaction.

Mayor Harper was a quaint character, and his odd rulings when presiding in Special Sessions were the talk of the town. If a shoemaker, for instance, was arraigned before him, he would say : "Well, we want shoemakers on the island, so we'll send you up for three months, and be smart while you last, John, be smart." Or, in the instance of a man who claimed to be "a sort of carpenter": "Well, we'll send you up for two months to round your apprenticeship, and the city will take care of your lodging and board, Matthew."

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1844-45, XI, No. 40.

Rynders and His Empire Club.

In the reaction that set in, many voters swung back to Tammany on the general belief that it was no worse than the other parties. This change of sentiment put the organization in good form to carry the city for James K. Polk in November, 1844. A short time before this there had come into distinction one of the most effective auxiliaries of the Wigwam. This was the Empire Club,¹ of No. 28 Park Row. Its chief was Captain Isaiah Rynders, and its membership was made up of a choice variety of picked worthies who could argue a mooted point to a finish with knuckles. Rynders had a most varied career before entering New York politics. A gambler in New Orleans, he mixed in some bowie and pistol fights there in which he was cut severely on the head and elsewhere, and his hat was perforated by a bullet. On a Mississippi steamboat he drove O'Rourke, a pugilist, out of the saloon with a red-hot poker, after O'Rourke had lost at faro and had attempted to kill the winner. These were but a few of his many diversions. In Washington he was arrested with Breedlove and Jewell on suspicion of being connected with the theft of a large sum in Treasury notes, though no proof was found against him. He was a very considerable power in the Wigwam for over twenty years, frequently officiating at meetings there. Chief among the club's other members of like proclivities were such noted fighters and "unterrified Democrats" as "Country McCleester" (McClusky), "Bill" Ford, "Manny" Kelly, John Ling, "Mike" Phillips, "Bill" Miner, "Denny" McGuire, "Ike" Austin, "Tom" McGuire, "Tom" Freeman and "Dave" Scandlin. After the nomination of Henry Clay, "Johnny" Austin—a common report of the day had it—was offered the sum of $2,000 to bring himself and five of his associates—McClusky, Kelly, Ford, Scandlin and Phillips—into the Unionist Club (a Whig organization) with the hope that they could secure success to the Whigs in the city. Offices also were promised, but the offers were refused; whether because the Wigwam held forth greater inducements is not clear.

¹ Within a few months after its organization the Empire Club had thirty-three parades and had been hired to go to Albany, Trenton, Tarrytown and other cities to help the Democracy. Whenever the Empire Club met a rival political club, a fight was sure to follow.

Tammany Wins for Polk.

Aided by these worthies, and by the popular indignation against the reform administration, the Wigwam men grew confident. They were now heard boasting that they intended electing their entire ticket. There being no longer fear of the Registry law (which the Wigwam had recently influenced a friendly Legislature to repeal on the ground of its discriminative application to New York City alone), fraud was open and general. The vote on its face proved this; since, while New York City could claim a legitimate vote of only 45,000, the Polk electors were credited with 28,216, and the Clay electors with 26,870 votes. For James G. Birney, the Abolition candidate, but 118 votes were polled, or at least counted.

Uproar in the Wigwam.

The Tammany General Committee, on January 13, 1845, passed resolutions favoring the annexation of Texas and calling a public meeting. With a view of glorifying John Tyler—to whom they owed their positions—and at the same time of winning the good will of the incoming administration, the Custom House officers tried to anticipate the committee's action, but were not allowed to use the hall. Resolved, at any rate, to control the meeting regularly called, they crowded two thousand of their creatures, under the leadership of Rynders, into the Wigwam. The meeting was soon one of uproar, turbulence and some fighting. Rynders had his resolutions adopted "amid yells, shouts, screams, oaths, cheers, blasphemy, hisses and an uproar never before known in the pandemonium of politics." It was the generally expressed opinion that the time had come when the proceedings of a meeting at Tammany Hall were no longer to be considered as any certain indication of the opinions of the Democratic party; that a class of men who chose to organize themselves for the purpose, by being early on the ground, acting in concert and clamoring according to certain understood signals, could carry any set of resolutions they pleased, in the very teeth of the large majority of the Democratic party.

Tammany Returned to Power.

In the local campaign of 1845 Tammany acted sagaciously. It nominated William F. Havemeyer for Mayor, laying stress on the fact that he was a "native New Yorker." The Native Americans renominated Harper, and the Whigs, Dudley Selden. The vote stood : Havemeyer, 24,183 ; Harper, 17,472 ; Selden, 7,082. Tammany secured a majority of 26 on joint ballot in the Common Council—the real power.

Mayor Havemeyer sincerely tried to effect reforms. In the beginning of his term he urged the fact that the Common Council united in itself nearly all the executive with all the legislative power, and declared that its main business was to collect and distribute, through the various forms of patronage, nearly a million and a half dollars a year.¹ His attacks upon the arbitrary powers and corrupt practises of the Common Council made so little impression upon that body that on May 13, the very first day of convening, the Aldermen, immediately after the reading of the Mayor's message, removed no less than seventy officials, from the heads of departments to Street Inspectors ;² and on subsequent days the process was continued until every post was filled with a Tammany man.

But the effect upon the public mind was such that in 1846 a new charter was drafted and adopted, which deprived the Common Council of the power which it hitherto had enjoyed of appointing the heads of departments, and gave their election direct to the people.

Mayor Havemeyer not being pliable enough for the Wigwam leaders, they nominated and elected, in the Spring of 1846, Andrew H. Mickle, by a vote of 21,675, the Whigs receiving 15,111, and the Native Americans,

¹ Annual Message, 1845.

² Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, XXIX : 1-55.

8,301.¹ Mayor Mickle was regarded as "one of the people." He was born in a shanty in the "bloody ould Sixth," in the attic of which a dozen pigs made their habitation. Marrying the daughter of the owner of a large tobacco house, he later became its proprietor. He improved his opportunities, business and official, so well that he died worth over a million dollars.

¹ Tammany won by a minority vote both in 1845 and in 1846. That neither Tammany nor the Native Americans had enacted any competent reforms in the matter of the taxation of property was conclusively shown in an Aldermanic report of 1846. It appeared from this report that thirty million dollars' worth of assessable property escaped taxation every year, and that no bona fide efforts were being made by the officials to remedy this state of affairs. Proceedings of the Board of Assistant Aldermen, Vol. XXIX, Document No. 24.

CHAPTER XVI.

"BARNBURNERS" AND "HUNKERS."

1846-1850.

Two factions had lately arisen in Tammany Hall—the "Barnburners" and the "Hunkers." Differences in principle had at first caused the division, but it was characterized, nevertheless, by a lively race for office.

The "Barnburners" were the radical Democrats who believed, among other things, that slavery should not be extended to free territory. The nickname was occasioned by the saying of a contractor, a few years before: "These men are incendiaries; they are mad; they are like the farmer, who, to get the rats out of his granary, sets fire to his own barn."

The "Hunkers" were the office-holding conservatives, very unwilling to have anything disturb their repose, and above all, opposed to the agitation of the slavery question. Their influence was thrown wherever possible with the slaveholding States. The term "Hunkers" arose from their characteristic of striving to keep their offices to the exclusion of everybody else—"to get all they can and keep all they can get."¹

Whigs Triumph Again.

The quarrel was as sharply defined throughout the State as in New York City. Such men as Samuel J.

¹ The Century Dictionary derives the word from the Dutch honk, post, goal or home. The transition in meaning from "goal" to "office" is easy and natural.

Tilden, C. C. Cambreleng, William F. Havemeyer and Minthorne Tompkins were the local leaders of the "Barnburners"; John McKeon, Lorenzo B. Shepard,¹ a brilliant young leader who was a noted orator at the early age of 19; Edward Strahan and Emanuel B. Hart were some of the chiefs of the "Hunkers." This factional struggle, together with the dissatisfaction given by the city administration, weakened Tammany, whose nominee, in the Spring election of 1847, J. Sherman Brownell, was defeated by the Whig candidate, William V. Brady. The vote stood: Brady, 21,310; Brownell, 19,877; Ellis G. Drake (Independent), 2,078. This was the first time in nine years that the city had been carried by the Whigs proper, though they were aided somewhat by the Native Americans.

"Barnburners" and "Hunkers" laid aside their differences momentarily when President Polk visited the city in June, 1847, one of his objects being to be initiated a member of the Tammany Society. On June 26 he was waited upon at the Astor House by a deputation of the society, headed by Elijah F. Purdy. Quite worn out after a torrid day of handshaking, Polk accompanied his escorts to the large room in the Wigwam, where members of the society were usually initiated. Later, the President emerged, looking happy at having availed himself of membership in a political society which could sway Presidential choices and elections and perhaps determine his own future political fate.

¹ Shepard became Grand Sachem at an early age. He was one of the very few influential men achieving prominence in the society or organization against whose character, public or private, no charges were ever brought.

Havemeyer Again Elected.

This incident past, the factions resumed their quarrel and warred so effectually that in the general election of November, 1847, the Whigs again won, by more than 3,000 votes. But Tammany, in its darkest moments, was fertile in expedients. It now arranged a great meeting for February 5, 1848, in commendation of the Mexican War. Sam Houston and Gen. Foote made speeches, and one of the Tammany orators assured the audience that though Tammany Hall "erred sometimes," its "patriotic ardor was never cooled." The success of this war brought thousands of voters back to the Democratic ranks in the city. Besides, "Barnburners" and "Hunkers" were tiring of defeat. Neither relished exile from office all the time. They agreed on the nomination of former Mayor Havemeyer, who personally was popular, though the Wigwam leaders had caused his administration to be discredited. Havemeyer was elected by the slender majority of 928 over the Whig candidate, Mayor Brady. The Native American party had now about gone out of existence.

Campaign of 1848.

But the factions soon disagreed again on national questions, and sent conflicting Tammany delegations to the national convention in Baltimore, in May, 1848. After tedious debate and much acrimony both were allowed a half vote to each delegate. When, however, it was seen that the "Barnburners" voted with some other States in support of the principle against the extension of slavery to free territory, a movement was started to reject them. The prospect of losing the all-important electoral vote of New York State was not pleasant to the convention. To avoid the arbitrary rejection of either faction the committee on credentials suggested a compromise by which it refused to open the discussion as to which faction ought to be accepted until both had pledged themselves to abide by the decision of the convention. Knowing that this would be pro-slavery, the "Barnburners" declared that "the Democracy of New York must be admitted unconditionally or not at all," and withdrew. The "Hunkers" took the required pledge.

Arriving home, the "Barnburner" delegates issued an address saying that a faction existed among them whose object was the perpetuation and the extension of human servitude. Bold, unscrupulous and active, it wielded to a great degree the patronage of the Federal Government. It addressed itself to the fears of some, to the cupidity of others. By these means it had got possession of the late national convention and had proclaimed a candidate for the Presidency—a man who obtained his nomination only as the price of the most abject subserviency to the slave power. The "Barnburners" then took steps to name candidates in opposition to Lewis Cass and Gen. W. O. Butler, the Baltimore nominees, who had been promptly approved by the "Hunker" element in the Wigwam. Calling Martin Van Buren from obscurity, they nominated him for President, anticipating the action of the Free Soil convention at Buffalo in August.

Throughout the slavery agitation up to the firing on Fort Sumter, the South had no firmer supporter than Tammany. In the hall Southern representatives spoke and spread broadcast their doctrines on every available occasion; however ultra those doctrines might be, the Wigwam audiences never missed applauding them enthusiastically.

The "Hunkers" immediately opened a series of Cass meetings. "All the South asks," said Gen. Stevenson at one of them in Tammany Hall, on June 9, 1848, "is non-interference." He was cheered wildly. As usual, the "regular" Democratic nominations were supported by the backbone of the Democracy in New York City—those who clung to the mere name and forms of the party as well as the active men who lived in office and luxuriated on the spoils. The "Barnburners," otherwise now styled the Free Soilers, were quite as active as the "Hunkers," and their defection on election day enabled Gen. Taylor to carry the city—the supposed Democratic stronghold—by 9,883 votes.

Whigs Elect Woodhull Mayor.

The dissensions in the Wigwam were as pronounced in the Spring of 1849—at least outwardly. The two factions held separate Mayoralty conventions on the same night. The "Barnburners" were naturally eager for Havemeyer, one of themselves, but he would not have the honor. Hearing that the "Hunkers" were proposing Myndert Van Shaick, an extremely popular man, the "Barnburners" resolved to steal the "Hunkers'" thunder by nominating him themselves. This they accordingly did, and the bewildered public was treated to the spectacle of Van Shaick standing as the candidate of both the recriminating factions. There were not wanting those who professed to see in this action an agreement between the leaders on the matter of the local offices. The Whigs elected Caleb S. Woodhull by 4,121 plurality, and secured over two-thirds of the members of the Common Council. The Democrats of the "Old School,"—the unyielding "Hunkers"—would not vote for a candidate the Free Soilers approved of; they either did not vote at all or voted for Woodhull.

Factions Unite for the State Campaign.

The "Barnburners," practically driven out of Tammany Hall by the "Hunkers," had been meeting elsewhere. Tiring of defeats, however, overtures for reunion were made during the Fall campaign. A fusion resulted, not only in the city but in other parts of the State, and candidates were agreed upon.¹ But no sooner had the reunion been declared than a number of irreconcilable "Hunkers" and certain other politicians,—including Daniel E. Sickles, James T. Brady, "Mike" Walsh and John M. Bloodgood—formed a self-constituted "Democratic-Republican Executive Committee" to oppose the deal. On the day before election they sent out a circular denouncing the fusion, and declaring that though it promised much it was really only a means of engrafting upon Democratic time-honored principles a set of abolition doctrines, "hostile to the peace and welfare of the Republic and repugnant to the sympathies and intelligence of the Democratic party.”¹

¹ New York Weekly Herald, November 3, 1849. James Gordon Bennett, editor and owner of this newspaper, "was a recognized member of the Tammany party." ("Memoirs of James Gordon Bennett and His Times," 1855. 80.) When Bennett first contemplated starting a newspaper, it was to the Young Men's General Committee that he applied for funds. Though professing to be independent, the Herald nearly always supported Tammany Hall. In 1837-39, however, it had supported Aaron Clark.

This circular was misleading. Neither the “Barnburners” nor the “Hunkers” had imposed any sacrifice of principle upon the other. They merely agreed for the time being to suspend their differences in order to get a controlling influence over the disbursement of municipal finances. The opinion of each voter on the slavery question was left untouched.

The election was hotly contested, for by the new State constitution the selection of minor State officers had been taken from the Governor and Legislature and given to the people.² Owing to this defection of a strong Tammany group the Whigs carried the city. The excitement in the Wigwam, when the result became known, was intense. Four thousand Tammany men, looking either for office or party triumph, were in a frenzy. W. D. Wallach, a politician of some note, mounted the rostrum, and under the stimulus of disappointment, held forth in a long and remarkable harangue, to which his auditors listened in comparative silence, though the same utterances at another time might have provoked a riot in the Wigwam. Men of downright dishonesty, Wallach said, had crept into the organization by the aid of bullies and loafers. These men of late years had managed to wield great power at Tammany primary elections, where as everybody knew, matters long had been arranged “upon the assumption that by a free application of money, violence and roguery, the people could and should be controlled." What wonder was it, he asked, that thousands of quiet and respectable Democrats had ceased to bow to the authority of regular nominations, however worthy the candidates, when they found more or less of the Tammany nominating committees returned in part, notoriously by violence, if not by fraud?

¹ The committee advertised the stand it had taken in the Democratic journals of the city on November 5.

² The city charter of 1846 had likewise increased the number of elective offices in the municipality.

Factional Fight Reopens.

The breach between the "Barnburners" and the extreme "Hunkers" was reopened and widened by this self-constituted committee's action. It led to the formation of two bodies, each claiming to be the genuine general committee of Tammany Hall. One was led by Fernando Wood, who was suspected of being a "Hunker," but was too much of a politician to be active against the "Barnburners." This general committee was of a compromising disposition. In brief, it was composed mainly of what were known as political "trimmers"—men willing to make any sacrifices of principle for individual or party success. The other committee, of which Henry M. Western was the head, was composed of "Hunkers" and took up the interests of the self-formed "Democratic-Republican Executive Committee." It was the first body in the North to call a meeting to denounce the Wilmot proviso. To all intents standing for principle, each committee sought the tremendous advantages of the possession of Tammany Hall and its political machinery. By being recognized as the "regular" general committee, its nominations would be "regular" and as such would command the votes of the great mass of Democrats. To obtain that recognition both committees realized the necessity of obtaining a majority of the Council of Sachems, which, in critical moments, had so thoroughly demonstrated its legal right to eject from the Wigwam any man or body of men it pleased.

Contest at the Society's Election.

The opening struggle between the factions for mastery took place at the annual election of the society on April 15, 1850. Each body made desperate efforts to elect its list of Sachems. The ticket in favor of a union of the factions and of reorganizing the "Wood committee" was headed by Elijah F. Purdy, then Grand Sachem, and contained the names of Isaac V. Fowler, John A. Bogert, John J. Manning and others. Former Mayor Mickle, Charles O'Connor, Francis B. Cutting and M. M. Noah led the rival ticket.

The "Hunkers" brought to the polls many men, who, though still members of the society, long since had gone over to the Whigs and had lost the habit of attending the society's meetings. These men claimed the right to vote, and it was unquestionably theirs. In law the Tammany Society was merely a charitable and benevolent corporation. No member in good standing could be debarred from voting. With cheerful alacrity these Whig members lent their aid in distracting the Democratic party into keeping up a double organization. Office-holders and other men openly attached to the Whig party voted.¹ When it seemed that most of the Purdy ticket was elected, the two "Hunker" inspectors suddenly found three more "Hunker" tickets in the ballot box. Previously this box had been examined, emptied and exposed publicly. These three ballots, if counted, would have elected one more Sachem of the "Hunker" stripe, giving that faction six of the thirteen Sachems—one short of a majority. The two "Barnburner" inspectors refused to count them. The result of the election being disputed, Purdy promptly took possession of the books and papers of the society.

¹ Evening Post (Democratic), April 16, 1850.

Sachems Again Shut Out Both Factions.

As the best solution of the troubles, the Sachems, on April 26, determined to forbid both committees admittance to the Wigwam. The Sachems did not acknowledge accountability to any one for their actions, not even to the society which elected them.¹ Representing themselves as the supreme judges of which was the real Democratic General Committee or whether there was any,² the Sachems let it be understood that they would act as mediators. By a vote of 10 to 1,³ they "recommended"—an action equivalent to an arbitrary order—that the "Wood committee" provide for the election of delegates to a convention in Tammany Hall "to reorganize the New York City Democracy." From the substance of the invitation sent out by the society to various conspicuous personages it was evident that, though the "Wood committee" had been favored, somehow a majority of the "Hunker," or pro-slavery, Sachems was installed.⁴

¹ New York Weekly Herald, May 4, 1850. ² Ibid.

³ Evening Post, May 2, 1850.

⁴ Seven Sachems signed the letter of invitation, which read in part: "Brothers of this society look with deep concern at

The plan of a convention was accepted by both factions. But by manipulating the primary elections for delegates Fernando Wood succeeded in filling the convention with his own creatures, allowing, for form's sake, a sprinkling of opponents. Wood, whose aim was to get the nomination for Mayor, was the chief "trimmer," though each side made concessions. Various equivocal resolutions touching the slavery question were adopted, and a new Tammany General Committee, comprising "Barnburners," mild "Hunkers" and ultra-"Hunkers" was formed.

Another Fusion Arranged.

The "Barnburners" and "Hunkers" then agreed upon a coalition in State and city, uniting on Horatio Seymour for Governor. Despite the diplomacy of Wood, who had arranged this pact, an explosion was narrowly averted a few weeks later. Finding themselves in a majority at a slimly attended meeting of the general committee in the latter part of September, 1850, the uncompromising "Hunkers" denounced parleying with Free Soilers, and by a vote of 16 to 11 refused to sustain Seymour. As soon as their action became known there was a burst of indignation. The threat was made that if the committee did not rescind it, the Council of Sachems, most of whom, it seems, Wood had won over the present critical state of the country and are not unmindful of the services of those who are laboring to thwart the designs of the fanatics and demagogues who are waging an unholy crusade against a union of independent sovereignties, which union has done much to advance and perpetuate the principles of American liberty throughout the world. * * * We have no sympathy with those who war upon the South and its institutions." to his plans, would turn it out of Tammany Hall. The members of the committee hastened to meet, the ultra-"Hunkers" were routed, and the State candidates strongly indorsed.

CHAPTER XVII.

DEFEAT AND VICTORY.

1850-1852.

Under a new law the Mayor's term was extended to two years, and the time of election, with that of the other city officers, was changed to November. The latter change gave great satisfaction to the leaders, for it enabled them to trade votes. Trading grew to such an extent that charges became common of this or that nominee for President, Governor, State Senator and so on being "sold out" by the leaders to insure their own election.

The Tammany organization, too, had made a change. It had adopted the convention system of nominating. This new method was much more satisfactory to the leaders, because the election of delegates to the conventions could easily be controlled, and the risk of having pre-arranged nominations overruled by an influx of "gangs" into the great popular meeting was eliminated.

A show of opposition to the proposed program was, however, still necessary. The first general convention was held in October, 1850. Fernando Wood was the leading candidate for Mayor, and it was certain that he would be nominated. But the first ballot showed a half-dozen competitors. The second ballot, however, disclosed the real situation, and Wood was chosen by 29 votes, to 22 for John J. Cisco.

Early Career of Wood.

Wood was a remarkable man. As a tactician and organizer he was the superior both of his distant predecessor Burr and of his successors Tweed and Sweeny. He was born in Philadelphia, in June, 1812, of Quaker parents. At the age of thirteen, he was earning $2 a week as a clerk. Later, he became a cigarmaker and tobacco dealer, and still later, a grocer. As a lad he was pugnacious; in a Harrisburg bar-room he once floored with a chair a State Senator who had attacked him. But he seems to have been amenable to good advice; for once when a Quaker reprimanded him for his excessive use of tobacco with the observation, "Friend, thee smokes a good deal," he at once threw away his cigar, and gave up the habit.

Coming to New York, he engaged in several business enterprises, all the while taking a considerable interest in politics. He was elected to Congress in 1840, serving one term. Gradually he came to make politics his vocation. Political manipulation before his day was, at the best, clumsy and crude. Under his facile genius and painstaking care, it developed to the rank of an exact science. He devoted himself for years to ingratiating himself with the factors needed in carrying elections.¹ He curried favor with the petty criminals of the Five Points, the boisterous roughs of the river edge, and the swarms of immigrants, as well as with the peaceable and industrious mechanics and laborers; and he won a following even among the business men. All these he marshalled systematically in the Tammany organization. Politics was his science, and the "fixing" of primaries his specialty; in this he was perhaps without a peer.

¹ Wood's was an attractive personality. He was a handsome man, six feet high, slender and straight, with keen blue eyes, and regular features. His manner was kindly and engaging.

Wood Defeated.

His unscrupulousness was not confined to politics. During this brief campaign he was repeatedly charged with commercial frauds as well as with bribery and dishonest practices at the primaries. A year later he was shown to have been guilty before this time of having defrauded a partner of $8,000, and he escaped conviction by the merest technicality.¹

Political standards in the fifties were not high. But the rowdy character of a great part of Tammany's membership, and the personal character of many of its nominees, particularly that of Wood, proved too much to bear, even for those days, and a strong revulsion followed. Former Mayors Havemeyer and Mickle; John McKeon, a leader of note, and other prominent Democrats revolted. The election resulted in a Whig victory, Ambrose C. Kingsland securing 22,546 votes to 17,973 for Wood. A great Democratic defection was shown by the fact that Horatio Seymour carried the city by only 705 plurality.

The Society Again Invokes Patriotism.

So general were the expressions of contempt for the character of the Wigwam that the Sachems resolved to invoke again the spirit of patriotism, and consequently fixed upon a revival of the old custom of Independence Day celebrations. In 1851 the Common Council of Sachems was a mixture of compromise "Barnburners" and "Hunkers." The committee of arrangements—Elijah F. Purdy, Daniel E. Delavan, Richard B. Connolly, Stephen C. Duryea and three others—sent invitations, filled with lofty and patriotic sentiments, to various national politicians. "Barnburners" also were invited, the conciliatory Sachems being sincerely tired of a warfare which threatened to exile them all from the sinecures of city and State offices.

¹ Wood was charged with having obtained about $8,000 on false representations from his partner, Edward E. Marvine, in a transaction. Marvine brought suit against Wood in the Superior Court, and three referees gave a unanimous decision in the plaintiff's favor. The Grand Jury, on November 7, 1851, indicted Wood for obtaining money under false pretenses, but he pleaded the Statute of Limitations. A friendly Recorder decided that as his offence had been committed three years previously (on November 7, 1848), the period required by the statute had been fully covered. The indictment, therefore, was quashed, and Wood escaped by one day.

The Society of Tammany, or Columbian Order, the circular said, had originated "in a fraternity of patriots, solemnly consecrated to the independence, the popular liberty and the federal union of the country." Tammany's councils were "ever vigilant for the preservation of those great national treasures from the grasp alike of the treacherous and the open spoiler." It had "enrolled in its brotherhood many of the most illustrious statesmen, patriots and heroes that had constellated the historic banners of the past and present age. * * * And it remained to the present hour," the glowing lines read on, "instinct with its primitive spirit and true to the same sacred trust."

The rhetoric delivered at the celebration was quite as pretentious and high-flown. But the phrases made no impression on the public mind. No impartial observer denied that the Wigwam's moral prestige with the State and national party was for the time gone. Throughout the country the belief prevailed that the politicians of the metropolis deserved no respect, merit or consideration ; and that they were purchasable and transferable like any stock in Wall street.

Sales of Nominations.

If before 1846 nominations were sold it was not an open transaction. Since then the practice of selling them had gradually grown, and now the bargaining was un concealed. Upon the highest bidder the honors generally fell. Whigs and Tammany men were alike guilty. If one aspirant offered $1,000, another offered $2,000. But these sums were merely a beginning ; committees would impress upon the candidate the fact that a campaign costs money ; more of the " boys " would have to be " seen ; " such and such a " ward heeler " needed " pacifying " ; a band was a proper embellishment, with a parade to boot, and voters needed " persuading." And at the last moment a dummy candidate would be brought forward as a man who had offered much more for the nomination. Then the bidder at $2,000 would have to pay the difference, and if the office sought was a profitable one, the candidate would be a lucky man if he did not have to disgorge as much as $15,000 before securing the nomination. Some candidates were bled for as much as $20,000, and even this was a moderate sum compared to the prices which obtained a few years later.

The primaries were attended by " gangs " more rowdy and corrupt than ever ; Whig ward committees often sold over to Tammany,¹ and Whig votes, bought or traded, swelled the ballot boxes at the Wigwam primaries. Nearly every saloon was the headquarters of a

¹ New York Tribune, May 5, 1852. (This admission on the part of a Whig journal caused a great stir.)

"gang" whose energies and votes could be bought. In Tammany Hall an independent Democrat dared not speak unless he had previously made terms with the controlling factions, according to a relatively fixed tariff of rates. The primaries of both parties had become so scandalously corrupt as to command no respect.

The General Craze for Wealth.

The discoveries of gold in California and Australia created in all classes a feverish desire for wealth. Vessel after vessel was arriving in the harbor with millions of dollars' worth of gold dust. Newspapers and magazines were filled with glowing accounts of how poor men became rich in a dazzlingly short period. The desire for wealth became a mania, and seized upon all callings. The effect was a still further lowering of the public tone; standards were generally lost sight of, and all means of "getting ahead" came to be considered legitimate. Politicians, trafficking in nominations and political influence, found it a most auspicious time.

This condition was intensified by the influx of the hordes of immigrants driven by famine and oppression from Ireland, Germany and other European countries. From over 129,000 arriving at the port of New York in 1847, the number increased to 189,000 in 1848, 220,000 in 1849, 212,000 in 1850, 289,000 in 1851 and 300,000 in 1852. Some of these sought homes in other States, but a large portion remained in the city. Though many of these were thrifty and honest, numbers were ignorant and vicious, and the pauper and criminal classes of the metropolis grew larger than ever. The sharper-witted among them soon mended their poverty by making a livelihood of politics. To them political rights meant the obtaining of money or the receiving of jobs under the city, State or national government, in return for the marshalling of voters at the polls. Regarding issues they bothered little, and knew less.

The effects of the Whig and Native American denunciation of the alien vote were now seen. The naturalized citizens almost invariably sided with Tammany Hall, although there were times when, by outbidding the Wigwam, the Whigs were enabled to use them in considerable numbers.

The "Forty Thieves" Council.

Despite an unusual degree of public condemnation, Tammany managed, by a temporary pacification of the factions and a general use of illegal votes, to carry the city in the Fall of 1851 by nearly 2,000 majority. But it could not hold the regular Democratic strength, for Wright, the candidate for Governor, received over 3,000 majority. Frauds were notorious. In one of the polling places of the Nineteenth Ward, the Wigwam's candidates for Alderman and Assistant Alderman were counted in after a mob invaded it and forced the Whig inspectors to flee for their lives. When the votes for the Assembly ticket were counted 532 were announced, although there were only 503 names on the poll list. This was but an instance of the widespread repeating and violence.

With its large majority in the Common Council Tammany at first made a feint at curtailing city expenses. The taxpayers complained that the taxes were upwards of $3,500,000, for which there was little apparent benefit.

The new Common Council made professions of giving a spotless administration; but before its term was over it had generally earned the expressive title of "the Forty Thieves."¹ This was the body that with lavish promises of reform replaced the Whig Common Council. William M. Tweed, an Alderman in the "Forty Thieves" Common Council, was busy in the Fall of this year indignantly defending, in speeches and public writings, the Aldermen from the numerous charges of corruption; but, as will be seen, these charges were by no means groundless.

Attitude of the Workingmen.

Since the passing of the Equal Rights party, the mechanics and laborers had taken no concerted part in politics, not even as a faction. But at this period they were far from being lethargic. The recent discoveries of gold and silver had given a quickened pulse to business, enormously increasing the number of transactions and the aggregate of profits. The workers were determined to have their share of this prosperity, and acted accordingly. Old trade-unions were rapidly strengthened and new ones formed. More pay and shorter hours of work were demanded. Between the Spring of 1850 and the Spring of 1853 nearly every trade in the city engaged in one or more strikes, with almost invariable success.

Having now no sincere leaders to prompt them to concerted political action, the workers oscillated listlessly between the two parties. They had lost the tremendous influence secured in the thirties, and the business element had again become dominant. Legislature and Common Council vied with each other in granting exploitative charters, and the persons who secured these, generally by bribery, were considered the leaders of public opinion. Every company demanding special privileges of the State maintained its lobby at Albany. The City Council was more easily reached, and was generally dealt with personally. Fortunes were made by plundering the city and State, and while the conduct of the agents and actual performers in this wholesale brigandage—the lobbyists, Legislators and Aldermen—was looked upon somewhat doubtfully, their employers stood before the world as the representatives of virtue and respectability. The one force which might have stood as a bulwark against this system of pillage had been so completely demoralized by its political experiences that it could now only look on and let matters drift as they would.

¹ There was another "Forty Thieves" Council five or six years later, which must not be confounded with the earlier and more notorious one.

Campaign of 1852.

In the Baltimore Democratic convention the Wigwam was represented by so boisterous a delegation that its speakers were denied a hearing. Among the delegates were Capt. Rynders, "Mike" Walsh and a number of the same kind. Cass was their favorite, and they shouted for him lustily; but on attempting to speak for him they were invariably howled down, despite the fact that Cass had a majority of the convention almost to the end of the balloting.

The Wigwam, however, lost no time in indorsing the nomination of Franklin Pierce. In this ratification the "Barnburners" joined, ardently urging the election of candidates on a platform which held that Congress had no power under the Constitution "to interfere with the domestic institutions of the States"; which advocated compromise measures, the execution of the Fugitive Slave law, and which opposed all attempts to agitate the slavery question.

The election of November, 1852, was not only for President and Congressmen, but for a long list of officials, city and State. Each of the Wigwam factions began playing for advantage. On July 16 a portion of the general committee met, apparently to accept an invitation to attend the funeral of Henry Clay. The "Barnburners," finding themselves in a majority, sprang a trick upon the "Hunkers" by adopting a plan of primary elections favorable to their side. Later the general committee, in full meeting, substituted another plan, and a great hubbub followed. A "committee of conciliation," composed of members of both factions, was appointed. When it met, on August 20, the halls, lobbies and entrances of Tammany Hall were filled with a vicious assortment of persons, chiefly inimical to the general committee. "The bar-room," wrote a chronicler, "was the scene of several encounters and knock-downs. It was only necessary for a man to express himself strongly on any point, when down he went, by the hammer-fist of one of the fighting men." Even members of the committee, while passing in and out of the room, were intimidated. Daniel E. Sickles, was threatened with personal violence, and it might have gone hard with him had he not taken the precaution of arming himself with a bowie and revolver. Members' lives were constantly threatened; the scenes of uproar and confusion were indescribable. Mr. Sickles, for his own safety, had to jump from a window to Frankfort street, and other members were forced to retreat through secret byways.¹ It was near day-break when the factions consented to leave the Wigwam.

Rows at the Primaries.

The anxiety of each was explained by the proceedings at the primaries. The faction having a majority of the inspectors secured by far the greater number of votes, and consequently the delegates who had the power of making nominations. At the primaries of August, 1852, fraud and violence occurred at nearly every voting place. In some instances one faction took possession of the polls and prevented the other from voting; in others, both factions had control by turns, and fighting was desperate. One party ran away with a ballot box and carried it off to the police station. Many ballot boxes, it was alleged, were half filled with votes before the election was opened. Wards containing less than 1,000 legal Democratic voters yielded 2,000 votes, and a ticket which not a hundred voters of the ward had seen was elected by 600 or 700 majority. Whigs, boys and paupers voted; the purchasable, who flocked to either party according to the price, came out in force, and ruffianism dominated the whole.

The police dared not interfere. Their appointment was made by the Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, with the nominal consent of the Mayor, exclusively on political grounds and for one year. The policeman's livelihood depended upon the whims of those most concerned in the ward turmoils. A hard lot was the policeman's. On the one hand, public opinion demanded that he arrest offenders. On the other, most of the Aldermen had their "gangs" of lawbreakers at the polls, and to arrest one of these might mean his dismissal.¹ But this was not all. The politics of the Common Council changed frequently; and to insure himself his position the guardian of the peace must conduct himself according to the difficult mean of aiding his own party to victory and yet of giving no offense to the politicians of the other party. Hence, whenever a political disturbance took place the policeman instantly, it was a saying, became "deaf and blind, and generally invisible."² Tammany in Full Control.

¹ The Herald, which, as usual, supported Tammany this year, described (August 24, 1852) these violences in detail.

The necessity of uniting to displace the Whigs from the millions of city patronage and profit brought the factions to an understanding. Jacob A. Westervelt, a moderate "Hunker," and a shipbuilder of wealth, who was considered the very essence of "respectability," and a contrast to Wood, was nominated for Mayor. Tammany planned to have its candidates swept in on the Presidential current. National issues were made dominant, and the city responded by giving the Pierce electors 11,159 plurality, and electing the whole organization ticket.¹ Fraud was common. No registry law was in force to hinder men from voting, as it was charged some did, as often as twenty times. On the other hand, 80,000 tickets purporting to be Democratic, intended for distribution by the Whigs, but not containing the name of a single Democrat, were seized at the post-office and carried in triumph to the Wigwam.

¹ The political lawbreaker had a final immunity from punishment in the fact that Aldermen sat as Justices in the Mayor's Court, which tried such culprits, if ever they happened to be arrested.

² See Report of Chief of Police Matsell, Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XXX, part 1, No. 17. The extreme turbulence of the city at this time may be judged from the fact that, despite the comparative immunity of political lawbreakers, during the eight years 1846-54, 200,088 arrests were made, an average of 25,010 a year.

Tammany once more had full control of the city.

¹ The vote on Mayor stood: Westervelt, 83,251; Morgan Morgans, 23,719; Henry M. Western, 861; blank and scattering, 227; total, 58,058.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"HARDSHELLS" AND "SOFTSHELLS."

1852-1853.

The "Barnburner"-"Hunker" factional fight was succeeded by that of the "Hardshells" and "Softshells." How these ludicrous nicknames originated it is not possible to say. The "Softshells" were composed of a remnant of the "Barnburners"¹ and that part of the "Hunkers" who believed in a full union with the "Barnburners," especially in the highly important matter of distributing offices. The "Hardshells" were the "Old Hunkers" who disavowed all connection with the "Barnburners," or Free Soilers, except so far as to get their votes. This division also extended to other parts of the State, where perhaps real differences of political principle were responsible for it; but in the city the fundamental point of contention was the booty of office.

The "Hardshells" boasted in 1852 of a majority of the Tammany General Committee which met on December 2 to choose inspectors for the ward elections of delegates to the general committee for 1853. The control of these inspectors was the keynote of the situation, for they would return such delegates as they pleased. Angered at the appointment of "Hardshell" inspectors, the "Softshells" broke in the door of the committee room, assaulted the members of the committee with chairs, fractured some heads and forced the "Hards" to flee for refuge to the Astor House.¹

¹ Many of the "Barnburners" had finally broken with the Democratic party, and were now acting independently as Free Soilers. Afterward, in great part, these independents gravitated to the new Republican party.

Quarrel Over Possession of the Hall.

Agreeable to "usages," the departing general committee instructed the delegates of its successor to assemble in Tammany Hall on January 13, 1853, to be installed as the general committee for the ensuing year. Until this installation, the committee of the last year remained in power. In the interval the Sachems, who, in the peculiar mix of politics, were for the most part "Softshells," decided to take a hand in the game of getting control of the organization, and therefore called a meeting for the same night and at the same time.

The object of the old general committee was to allow only delegates whose seats were uncontested to vote on the organization, or the contest of seats, which would return a "Hardshell" committee. The Sachems, on the contrary, favored voting by those who had the indorsement of two of the three inspectors.

The "Hardshells" insisted that the Sachems had unwarrantably interfered; that this was the first time in the history of the society of any interference as to the manner of organizing the general committee; that the only power the Sachems had was to decide between contending parties for the use of the hall for political meetings, and that even then their power was doubtful.

The Grand Sachem ordered the doors of the meeting room locked till 7:30 o'clock, at which hour both factions streamed in. Soon there were two meetings in the same room, each with a chairman, and each vociferously trying to shout down the other. Neither accomplished anything, and both adjourned, and kept adjourning from day to day, awaiting positive action by the society.

¹ This affair was exploited in the General Courts later. Seven rioters were arrested.

The "Softshell" section of the general committee called a meeting for January 20, but it was prohibited by the Sachems. When doubt of their authority was expressed, the Sachems produced a lease executed in 1842 to Howard, the lessee of the property, by the Tammany Society, in which he agreed that he would not lease, either directly or indirectly, the hall, or any part of the building, to any other political party (or parties) whatever, calling themselves committees, whose general political principles did not appear to him or the Sachems to be in accordance with the general political principles of the Democratic-Republican General Committee of New York City, of which Elijah F. Purdy was then chairman. Howard had also agreed that "if there should be at any time a doubt arising in his mind or that of his assigns, or in the mind of the Grand Sachem of the Tammany Society for the time being, in ascertaining the political character of any political party that should be desirous of obtaining admission to Tammany Hall for the purpose of holding a political meeting, then either might give notice in writing to the Father of the Council of the Tammany Society, in which event it was the duty of the Father of the Council to assemble the Grand Council, who would determine in the matter and whose decision should be final, conclusive and binding."

Of the thirteen Sachems, eleven were "Softshells"—a predominance due to the activity of the "Barn-burners." The "Hardshells," without doubt, were in a majority in the Tammany Society and in Tammany Hall, but they had taken no such pains as had their opponents to elect their men. The Sachems' meeting on January 20, professedly to decide the merits of the contest, called for the ward representatives in turn. The "Hardshells" refused to answer or to acknowledge the Sachems' authority to interfere with the primary elections of the people. The Sachems then named by resolution the general committee they favored, thus deciding in favor of the "Softshell" committee. There was no little suppressed excitement, since the members of the Tammany Society, it was naïvely told, though allowed to be present, were not allowed to speak.

Protest Against Sachems' Action.

Alderman Thomas J. Barr, a member of the Tammany Society and chairman of the "Hardshell" committee, handed to the Sachems, on behalf of his associates, an energetic protest. Summarized, it read as follows :

"Tammany Society is a private association, incorporated for charitable purposes. There is nothing in its charter, constitution or by-laws making it a political organization in any sense of the term. The Democrats of New York City have never, in any manner or by any act, vested in the society the right to prescribe the rules for their government in matters of political organization.

"The society comprises among its members men belonging to all the different political parties of the day. The only political test of admission to membership is to be 'a Republican in favor of the constitution of the United States.' It is, besides, a secret society, whose transactions are known only to its own officers and members, except so far as might be the pleasure of the Council to make the proceedings public. 'It can never be tolerated that a body which, in the language of its charter, was created "to carry into effect the benevolent purpose of affording relief to the indigent and distressed," and which is wholly independent of the great body of the Democracy, shall be permitted to sit in judgment upon the primary organization of the Democratic-Republican [party of the city of New York; and such a state of things, if its absurdity be not too great for serious consideration, would amount to a despotism of the most repugnant character and render the Democratic party of the city an object of contempt and ridicule everywhere. * * * Tammany Society owns a portion of the premises known as Tammany Hall, which is let to Mr. Howard and forms the plant of his hotel. This fact is all that gives to the Tammany Society any, even the least political significance.'

"The general committee derives its powers from the people, who alone can take them away. The committee in its objects, its organization and its responsibilities to a popular constituency is wholly distinct from and independent of the Tammany Society, its council or its officers, and to be efficient for any good purpose must always so remain, leaving to the Tammany Society its legitimate duty of excluding from Tammany Hall those who are hostile to the Democracy and its principles." ¹

In the bar-room many leaders of the excluded faction were assembled, surrounded by their fighting men. When the Sachems' adverse decision was announced, their anger found vent in a sputter of oaths and threats, and the sum of $15,000 was subscribed on the spot for the building of a rival Tammany Hall. It is almost needless to say that the rival hall was never built.

¹ The statements of both sides were published officially in the New York Herald, February 10, 1853, the bare facts covering more than an entire page of solid print.

The Sachems' Reply.

The Sachems later replied to the protest with the defense that their lease to Howard obliged them to act as they did. By that lease the succession of Elijah F. Purdy's committee alone was at liberty to meet as a general committee in Tammany Hall; they (the Sachems) had not recognized Barr's committee as such, and moreover did not admit the claim the "Hardshell" committee made of their right to hire a room separate from the majority in a building in which they had no property whatever. The Council of Sachems insisted that it had exercised the right of excluding so-called general committees before; that Tammany was a benevolent society, and that benevolent societies had the same right as others to determine who should occupy their property.

The "Softshells" Win.

The "Hardshells" attempted to rout the "Softshells" at the regular meeting of the Tammany Society on February 12, but the Sachems' action was confirmed by a vote of two hundred to less than a dozen. Each faction then strained to elect a majority of the Sachems at the annual election on April 18. Private circulars were distributed, that of the "Softshells" being signed by Isaac V. Fowler, Fernando Wood, Nelson J. Waterbury, John Cochrane and others. It breathed allegiance to the national and State administrations, the regular organization and to the Baltimore platform. The "Hardshell" circular had the signatures of Richard B. Connolly, Cornelius Bogardus, Jacob Brush and others styling themselves the "Old Line Democrats."

The "Softshells" elected their ticket, and Isaac V. Fowler, afterward postmaster, was chosen Grand Sachem. This vote of a few score of private individuals decided the control of Tammany Hall and the lot of those who would share in the division of plunder for the next year.

"With the exception of some few quarrels," one friendly account had it, "which fortunately did not result in any personal damage to the disputants, the affair passed off very quietly. While the votes were counted upstairs some interesting scenes were presented in the bar-room, which was crowded with anxious expectants. Language of a rather exceptional character, such as 'political thieves,' 'swindlers,' etc., was employed unsparingly, but as the majority was peaceably inclined, there were no heads fractured."

CHAPTER XIX.

A CHAPTER OF DISCLOSURES.

1853-1854.

Now came an appalling series of disclosures regarding public officials. Acting on the affidavit of James E. Coulter, a lobbyist, charging that there was a private organization¹ in the Board of Aldermen formed to receive and distribute bribes, the Grand Jury, after investigation, handed down a presentment, on February 26, 1853, together with a vast mass of testimony.

"It was clearly shown," stated the presentment, "that enormous sums of money have been expended for and towards the procurement of railroad grants in the city, and that towards the decision and procurement of the Eighth Avenue Railroad grant a sum so large that would startle the most credulous was expended; but in consequence of the voluntary absence of important witnesses, the Grand Jury was left without direct testimony of the particular recipients of the different amounts."²

Solomon Kipp, one of the grantees of the Eighth and Ninth Avenue Railroad franchises, admitted frequently to a member of the Grand Jury that he had expended, in 1851, upwards of $50,000 in getting them.³ Five grantees of the Third Avenue Railroad franchise swore that upwards of $30,000 was paid for it in 1852 in bribes to both boards.¹ Of this sum Alderman Tweed received $3,000. Chief among those who bribed the Aldermen were Elijah F. Purdy (one of the line of Grand Sachems) and Myndert Van Schaick, who only a few years before had been the Tammany candidate for Mayor. A franchise for a surface railroad on Broadway, with scarcely any provision for compensation and with permission to charge a five-cent fare, was given to Jacob Sharp, over five profitable bids from responsible persons. One applicant, Thomas E. Davies, had offered to give the city one cent for every fare charged. In another application, Davies, D. H. Haight and others had offered $100,000 a year and the payment of a license fee of $1,000 on each car (the prevailing fee being $20) for a ten-years' grant, on the agreement to charge a five-cent fare. There were two other offers equally favorable.² When Mayor Kingsland had vetoed the bill³ the Aldermen had re-passed it, notwithstanding an injunction forbidding them to do so.⁴

¹ William H. Cornell, a sometime Sachem, was, according to the affidavit of Coulter, the head of this organization.

² Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XXI, part 2, No. 55. ³ Ibid.: 1573.

How the Ferry Leases Were Secured.

Dr. William Cockroft had to pay, among other sums, $500 to Assistant Alderman Wesley Smith to get favorable action on his application for a lease of the Catharine Street Ferry. After the passage of the grant, ¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XXI, part 2, No. 55: 1333-35.

² Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, XLVIII: 530-37.

³ Ibid.: 532.

⁴ For violating this injunction one Alderman—Oscar W. Sturtevant (a Whig)—was sentenced to a nominal fifteen days in prison and to pay a fine of $350, and the other offending Aldermen were merely fined. The courts afterward annulled the Sharp franchise.

Smith demanded $3,000 more, which Cockroft refused to pay.¹ Burtis Skidmore, a coal dealer, testified that in the Fall of 1851 James B. Taylor informed him that he had been an applicant for a ferry across the East River to Greenpoint, and that "he bribed members of the Common Council for the purpose of obtaining said grant, and that other applicants for the same ferry gave a larger bribe than he did, and obtained the grant, and that all members of the Common Council whom he had bribed returned to him the money he had paid them, with the exception of Alderman Wood, who kept the money from both parties." ²

John Morrell swore that one of the applicants for the lease of the ferry to Williamsburg applied to some of the Aldermen and was told that it would cost about $5,000 "to get the grant through." But a Mr. Hicks, another applicant, was so eager to "get it through" that he gave more than $20,000.³

The lease of the Wall Street Ferry was similarly disposed of. Silas C. Herring testified that he with others was told he could secure it by paying a certain Alderman $5,000. Herring declined. James B. Taylor was another applicant, in 1852. He was informed that it would cost him $15,000. He offered $10,000, but on the same night "Jake" Sharp offered $20,000 and got the grant. Taylor also testified that he additionally applied for the Grand Street Ferry lease. Other parties, however, paid more bribe money and obtained it, whereat one Alderman said that "it was the damnedst fight that was ever had in the Common Council; it cost them [Taylor's rivals] from $20,000 to $25,000."⁴

¹ Document No. 55: 1219.

² Ibid. : 1810.

³ Ibid. : 1403.

⁴ Ibid. : 1426-28.

Extortions of Various Sorts.

The Aldermen extorted money in every possible way. In defiance of the Mayor's veto they gave a $600,000 contract for the "Russ" street pavement, afterward found to be worthless, and which had to be replaced at additional cost. Russ had offered one Assistant Alderman $1,000 to help carry his election the next Fall if he voted favorably.¹ Exorbitant prices were paid for land on Ward's Island, several Aldermen and officials receiving for their influence and votes bribes of $10,000, and others even larger sums.² The Common Council sold to Reuben Lovejoy the Gansevoort Market property for $160,000 in the face of other bids of $225,000 and $300,000. Lovejoy, who, it was disclosed, was merely a dummy for James B. Taylor and others, testified "that it would cost from $40,000 to $75,000 to get this operation—the purchase of the Gansevoort property—through the city government."³

A coal merchant had to pay money for a favorable vote on his application for a lease of the Jefferson Market property, and another merchant testified to having paid one Assistant Alderman about $1,700 to get a pier lease.⁴ The Aldermen demanded and received bribes not only for passing measures but for suppressing them, and even invented many "strikes," as instanced by the case of Alderman Smith, who agreed for $250 to silence a resolution to reduce the Coroners' fees.¹ They demanded a share of every contract made by any city official, threatening, if it were not given, to stop his supplies and have his accounts investigated.² If a contractor or lessee refused to meet a "request," the Aldermen retaliated by imposing burdens upon him and reporting hostile resolutions.³

¹ Document No. 55: 1575-76. ² Ibid.: 1282.

³ Ibid.: 1445. In 1862 the Council resolved to buy back this same property for $533,437.50 and repassed the resolution over Mayor Opdyke's veto on January 3, 1863, thus, as the Mayor pointed out, entailing a new loss to the city of over $499,000, though the property had not increased in value. Proceedings of the Board of Councilmen, LXXXVIII: 723-25.

⁴ Document No. 55: 1572.

Applicants for the police force paid the Police Captains $40, and more to the Aldermen who appointed them. One man was reappointed Police Captain by Alderman Thomas J. Barr for $200, and another, assistant Captain for $100.⁴

Every city department was corrupt. It was found that one hundred and sixty-three conveyances were deeded to the Chief of Police, George W. Matsell, and his partner, Capt. Norris, in about a year.⁵ Matsell was mentioned also as receiving money from about one hundred men who patronized the odious Madame Restell's establishment in Greenwich street.⁶ Both the police and Aldermen collected money from saloons, though the Aldermen obtained the larger share, as they had the power of granting licenses.

Within three or four years William B. Reynolds received over $200,000 from the city, under a five-years' contract for removing dead animals, offal and bones, though at the time the contract was made other persons had offered to remove them free of expense, and one had even offered to pay the city $50,000 a year for the

¹ Document No. 55 : 1219.

² Ibid. : 1895-96. ³ Ibid. : 1897-98.

⁴ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XXII, No. 20:52-54.

⁵ Ibid., No. 48: 79. ⁶ Ibid.

exclusive privilege.¹ It was owing to Controller Flagg's action that a contract to index certain city records at a cost of between $200,000 and $300,000 despite the offer of a well-known publisher to do it for $59,000, was cancelled.² Flimsy tenement houses, causing later much fatality and disaster, were built in haste, there being no supervisory authority over their erection.³ The lighting of the city was insufficient, thousands of oil lamps still being used, and these, according to an old custom, not being lighted on moonlit nights.⁴

Both Tammany and Whig Aldermen and officials were implicated in these disclosures. Such was the system of city government that, though twenty-nine Aldermen were at one time under judgment of contempt of court, and a part of the same number under indictment for bribery, yet under the law they continued acting as Judges in the criminal courts. According to Judge Vanderpoel, bribery was considered a joke.

Reform Party Secures New Charter.

A new reform movement sprang up, which quickly developed into the City Reform party. The reformers proposed, as a first step, to amend the charter. The granting of leases for more than ten years was to be prohibited, and the highest bidder was to get them. A two-thirds vote was to be required to pass a bill over the Mayor's veto. Work to be done and supplies furnished costing more than $250 were to be arranged for on contract to the lowest bidder. Any person guilty of bribery, directly or indirectly, was to be sentenced, upon conviction, to not above ten years in prison and fined not over $5,000, or both. The right to sit as Judges of the criminal courts was to be taken away from the Aldermen, as was also the power of appointing policemen. The Board of Assistant Aldermen was to be abolished, and a Board of Councilmen, consisting of sixty members, was to be instituted in its place, the collective title of the two boards to be "the Common Council." The Aldermen were to be elected for two years (as determined in the charter of 1849) and the Councilmen for one year. An efficient auditing of accounts and claims against the city was called for, and only the more popular branch of the Common Council was to originate appropriations of money.

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XX, No. 82, and XXII, No. 41. ² Ibid., XXX, part 1, No. 16.

³ Ibid., XX, No. 5. ⁴ Ibid., No. 6.

Tammany had grown suddenly virtuous again, and responding to the public clamor over the disclosures, had declared its devotion to pure government. At a "reform" meeting of the Young Men's Union Club, John Cochrane, one of Wood's lieutenants, who later announced that he would vote "for the devil incarnate if nominated by Tammany Hall," declared: "Reform is at home in Tammany Hall. Its birthplace is Tammany Hall." The purification movement advanced so unmistakably that Tammany approved the amendments, and the legislative bill embodying some of them was supported by the Tammany delegation in the Senate and Assembly.

The bill passed, and upon being submitted to the people of the city, in June, 1853, was adopted by the significant vote of 36,000 to 3,000.

One of the benefits due to the City Reform party was the reorganization (1853) of the police under a separate department. The police were compelled to wear a uniform, against which there had been bitter prejudice,¹ and the term of appointment was made dependent upon good behavior.

Reform Party Carries the New Council.

Fortunately for the City Reform party, the division between the "Hardshells" and "Softshells" extending throughout the State caused the nomination of separate Democratic tickets in the Fall of 1853. There seemed less than ever any vital difference between the professed principles of the two. Under the name of "National Democrats" the "Hardshells" met in City Hall Park on September 26, and resolved :

"We regret that the Democracy of the city are prevented from holding this meeting in their accustomed hall. * * * The Democracy of the city waged in time past a successful war against a corporation which sought to control by money the political destinies of the country. We now from this time forward commence a campaign against another corporation known as the Tammany Society—a secret, self-elected and irresponsible body of men who have dared to usurp the right of determining who shall and who shall not meet in Tammany Hall. * * * The accidental ownership of a small equity of redemption of a small part of the ground upon which Tammany Hall stands may continue to enable the Sachems to prevent the Democracy from meeting within the hall, but we can meet in the park or in the open air or elsewhere."

¹ The general extent of this prejudice may be judged from the fact that at this time a number of suits were pending in the courts, seeking to restrain the city from enforcing an earlier order compelling uniforms to be worn.

The City Reform party nominated acceptable Whigs and Democrats pledged to reform, and obtained a decisive majority in the next Common Council.

CHAPTER XX.

FERNANDO WOOD'S FIRST ADMINISTRATION.

1854-1856.

Though the City Reform party brought about some beneficial changes in the system of city government, its Common Council did not meet public expectations. The Tribune, the chief supporter of the party, admitted this (May 3, 1854), declaring that much feeling was manifested over the failure of the reformers to realize the public hopes, and attributing the failure "to the power of those representing the great political parties in the two boards to league together and sell out to each other the interests of the city as partisan or personal considerations might dictate."

Accordingly, preparations were made to overthrow the new party. Fernando Wood now secured the "Soft-shell" nomination for Mayor, by packing the convention with his henchmen. The "Hardshells" held a separate convention, which ended in a row, a part nominating Wood, and the rest Augustus Schell.

Wood successfully intrigued to cause the Whigs to separate from the City Reformers; and to further divide the opposition, Tammany nominated sham reformers for the lesser city and State offices. The Whigs nominated for Mayor, John J. Herrick; the City Reformers, Wilson G. Hunt, and the Native Americans, or "Know-Nothings," springing to life again, put forward James W. Barker. Schell, Wood's Tammany opponent, withdrew in favor of Hunt.

The disreputable classes, believing that his success meant increased prosperity to themselves, energetically supported Wood, and the liquor-dealers formally commended him. In the city at this time were about 40,000 shiftless, unprincipled persons who lived by their wits and the labor of others. The trade of a part of these was turning primary elections, packing nominating conventions, repeating and breaking up meetings. Most of these were Wood's active allies.

He needed them all on election day. With every resource strained to the utmost, he won by a close margin. He was credited with 19,993 votes; Barker with 18,553; Hunt, 15,386, and Herrick, 5,712. Tammany, therefore, succeeded, though in a minority of over 17,000 votes.

A Favorable Beginning.

Upon assuming office, Wood surprised his followers by announcing that he would purge all offices of corruption and give good government. His messages were filled with flattering promises and lofty sentiments. At the outset he seemed disposed for good. He closed the saloons on Sunday, suppressed brothels, gambling houses and rowdyism, had the streets cleaned, and opened a complaint book. The religious part of the community for a time believed in him. He assumed personal charge of the police, and when a bill was introduced in the Legislature to strip him of this power, the foremost citizens called a mass meeting to support him.

The troubles between the "Hardshells" and "Softshells" continued throughout the year 1855. When the latter held their county ratification meeting in the Wigwam and the name of their nominee for Street Commissioner was announced, the "Hardshells," who had come thither with a nominee of their own, raised an uproar, whereupon "the factions on both sides went to work and pummeled each other pretty soundly and highly satisfactorily to the lookers, for at least ten minutes."

The Real Wood Appears.

The election of 1855 was of little consequence. All eyes were now turned to the coming contest of 1856. Before the end of a year Wood had begun to reveal his real nature. Many of the decent element that had for a time believed in him began to turn against him. He had also made himself unpopular with certain powerful Sachems by not giving them either a share, or a large enough share, in the spoils. His appointments were made wholly from a circle of personal friends who were more attached to him than to the Tammany organization. Knowing the folly of expecting a renomination from Tammany, as it was then constituted, he set about obtaining it by trickery.

Inducing Wilson Small, a Custom House officer holding a seat in the general committee, to resign, Wood had himself substituted. Then he personally assumed control of the primary election inspectors in every ward, so as to manipulate the election of convention delegates. He caused the appointment of an executive committee, which was to have the entire choice of inspectors in every instance in which the general committee failed to agree. This new committee was composed mainly of his friends, and he named himself chairman.

His henchmen incited divisions in such of the wards as were not under the control of his inspectors, and the contests, upon being referred to the "executive committee," were of course decided in Wood's favor. Thus he appropriated a great majority of the delegates to the nominating convention.

"It is well known," wrote Peter B. Sweeny and J. Y. Savage, secretaries of the Tammany General Committee, in a long statement denouncing Wood's thimble-rigging, "that for many years this [primary] system has been degenerating until it has become so corrupt as to be a mere machine in the hands of unprincipled men, by which they foist themselves before the people as the nominees of a party for office in defiance of public sentiment."¹ Sweeny and Savage charged further that when the primary elections took place under this patent process for cheating the people, the ballot boxes were stuffed and detachments of police were stationed at every poll to aid Wood's agents and bully his opponents. A sickening mass of evidence of corruption was at hand, Sweeny and Savage recounted.

Wood Renominated.

Wood was renominated by the city convention, and at an hour when most of his opponents on the general committee were absent, he had that body endorse his nomination by a vote of 56 to 26, nearly all of those voting being office-holders by his grace.

He also arranged a reconciliation between the "Hardshells" and "Softshells." With a show of traditional ¹ This statement was published officially in the New York newspapers, September 27, 1856.

Tammany custom, the "Softs" marched in Indian file to the Stuyvesant Institute, the headquarters of the "Hards," and the reunited leaders marched back to Tammany Hall—in pairs, arm-in-arm. The "Hard-shell"—"Softshell" contention thus became a thing of the past.

Another Tammany Candidate.

But Wood's personal enemies in the Wigwam were not to be appeased, and they nominated a candidate to oppose him—James S. Libby. Bitter feelings were aroused. At the Wood ratification meeting in the Wigwam, October 22, both Wood and Anti-Wood men crowded in, and then ensued another of those clashes for which Tammany Hall had become so celebrated. When John Kelly mentioned Wood's name the Anti-Wood men raised a din and smothered the speaker's voice. The Wood men, growing enraged, "pitched into the Anti-Woodites hot and heavy, and for a time a scene of the wildest clamor ensued. A general fight took place in front of the speaker's stand and all round the room. Blows were given and exchanged with great spirit, and not a few faces were badly disfigured." After a few planks had been plucked from the stand and wielded with telling effect, the Wood men won. "The great body of the Libbyites were kicked out of the room and down the stairs with a velocity proportionate to the expelling force behind."

The City Reform party was far from being satisfied with Wood's administration. In fact, it is no exaggeration to say that by the time of his second year in office the blackness of his administration exceeded anything known before. Seasoned men fancied they knew something of corruption, extravagance and malfeasance in the City Hall, but by 1856 they better understood the growth of these under a reckless and unprincipled Mayor.

Dominance of the Saloon.

The saloon power had grown until it controlled the politics of the city. In every groggery could be found a crowd of loafers and bruisers who could always be relied upon to pack a primary or insure or defeat the election of certain nominees. In these saloons the ward politicians held their meetings, and the keepers were ready at all times to furnish voters to parade, carrying partisan banners they could not read, or to cheer at mass meetings at the drop of a handkerchief. The saloon-keepers also furnished cheap illegal voters, ballot-box stuffers and thorough-bred "shoulder-hitters," to intimidate peaceable citizens, or as a last resort, to smash the ballot boxes.

The saloon-keepers were largely above the law. A disingenuous bill, passed in 1855, ordered the saloons to be closed on Sunday, but made no provision for enforcement. They were accordingly kept open, likely enough through assurances from Wood that the owners would not be molested. Their support of the Mayor was well-nigh unanimous.

It was the domination of politics by this element that caused great irritation and disgust. But the opposition to Wood was hopelessly divided. It had to contend, moreover, with the adverse factor of the introduction into the campaign of national issues. The fear of the new Republican party was sure to bring out a heavy vote for Buchanan and Breckinridge, and on the strength of this wave Tammany reasonably expected to be again swept into power.

Five Candidates in the Field.

The City Reformers had greatly declined in numbers, but they again came forward for the contest, nominating Judge James R. Whiting.¹ The Native American party, still maintaining its bitterness against the control of politics by foreigners, chose Isaac O. Barker, and the Whigs, Anthony J. Bleecker, making, with Wood and Libby, five Mayoralty candidates.

Though backed by the dregs of the city on the one hand, Wood did not neglect to secure some "respectability" on the other. During the campaign he received a testimonial signed by some of the leading bankers and merchants, praising him and his administration and expressing the hope of his re-election. Nearly all of the signers, it was afterwards disclosed, profited by Wood's placing of city funds or, buying of city goods.

Wood sought to force every man on the police force to subscribe to his election fund, one policeman, who refused to contribute, being kept on duty twenty-four hours at a stretch. From this source alone he gathered in from $8,500 to $10,000.

¹ Whiting, according to the testimony of James Perkins, before the Senate Investigating Committee in 1883, had been the chief lobbyist in the task of securing the notorious Seventh Ward Bank charter in 1831. It is a striking commentary on political standards of the day that unrebuted charges of such a nature formed no bar to the advancement of a politician to such distinctions as those of Judge, District Attorney and reform candidate for Mayor.

Wood Again Successful.

On election day the scum of the town shouted, repeated and bruised for Wood. Candidates were traded openly, and bribing was unconcealed.¹ The majority of the policemen were off on furlough, given by the Mayor as head of the Police Department, assisting actively for his re-election. At the polling places, so terrific was the competition for the millions of city plunder, that the Wood and Anti-Wood men fought savagely. In the Sixth Ward the Wood partisans, upon being attacked, retreated for the while, and coming back, armed with brickbats, clubs, axes and pistols, set upon and routed their foes. The police meanwhile calmly looked on, until the riot was at its height, when they made a show of concern by firing fifteen or more shots, all of which fortunately went astray. The Wood partisans then broke the ballot boxes to pieces and carried off the fragments for kindling wood. In the Seventeenth Ward the Anti-Wood men destroyed some of the Wood boxes; and in the First, and most of the other wards, the day was enlivened with assaults, riots and stabbings.

The count of the vote gave Wood, 34,860; Barker, 25,209; Bleecker, 9,654; Libby, 4,764, and Whiting, 3,646. The Buchanan electors carried the city with 41,913 votes; Fillmore, the American candidate, and Fremont, Republican, were allowed respectively 19,924 and 17,771 votes. Tammany Hall obtained a serviceable majority in the Common Council.

¹ Josiah Quincy related, in a lecture in Boston, that while in New York City on this election day, he saw $25 given for a single vote for a member of Congress. Upon expressing his surprise, Quincy was told that this man could afford to pay it. If re-elected, it would be a money-making operation. He had received $30,000 at the last session for "getting a bill through," and at that rate could afford to pay a good price.

The Republicans maintained that 10,000 fraudulent Democratic votes were cast in New York City and Brooklyn, and credited Wood with having profited by the most of those cast in this city. It was not an unreasonable contention, in view of the enormous increase over the vote of two years before.

A few days after the election a meeting in Tammany Hall, called to celebrate Buchanan's triumph, resolved that next to the success of Buchanan and Breckinridge, "the brightest and most signal achievement of the Democratic party, at this election, was the triumphant election of Fernando Wood !"

CHAPTER XXI.

WOOD'S SECOND ADMINISTRATION.

1856-1859.

Under Wood's second administration city affairs went from bad to worse. The departments reeked with frauds. The city paid Robert W. Lowber $196,000 for a lot officially declared to be worth only $60,000 and to two-thirds of which, it was proved, Lowber had no title. Controller Flagg charged that both the Mayor and the Common Council were parties to it.¹ Fraudulent computations and illegitimate contracts were covered by false entries.² Amounts on the ledger were revised so as to steal considerable sums from the city outright.³ To Bartlett Smith had been awarded a contract for grading certain streets. Before beginning work, however, the Legislature created Central Park out of that very territory.⁴ Smith demanded $80,000 from the city

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1859, No. 16. The courts decided later in favor of Lowber. As Controller Flagg refused to pay the claim on the ground of no funds being "applicable," Lowber caused the Sheriff to sell at auction, in October, 1858, the City Hall with its equipment and paintings to satisfy a judgment of $228,000, including damages, costs and interest. Mayor Tiemann bid the City Hall in for the sum of $50,000, and turned it over to the city when reimbursed. Documents of the Board of Alderman, 1859, XXVI, No. 1.

² Ibid., XXIII, No. 42; also Ibid., XXV, No. 10.

³ Ibid.

⁴ The Act was passed July 21, 1853. This was one of the very few public-spirited measures of the time. Tammany, however, immediately began to utilize the measure, through contracts for the clearing and improvement of the park, to the profit of its leaders and followers.

“for trouble in arranging to do the grading”—a claim the Common Council allowed, but Flagg refused to pay.

It was generally charged that Wood sold the office of Street Commissioner to the notorious Charles Devlin¹ for $50,000 cash, with certain reservations as to the patronage and profits. Devlin recouped himself; for an investigation revealed that he spent half a million dollars on contracts of which he was either the real contractor or surety, and on which he made the prices 75 per cent. higher than they ought to have been.² Of how much the city was plundered it was impossible to find out, since no reliable accounts of expenditures were kept in the Finance Department.³ Not a few officials, relinquishing offices paying about $2,500 a year, retired loaded with riches and surrounded by friends whom they had enriched. Wood himself was now reputed to be worth $400,000.

Character of the Judiciary.

Even the Judiciary was held in general contempt. The Lowber fraud (see previous page) was promptly excused and the defendant exonerated by the courts. In November, 1855, a City Judge was tried for corruption in having entered a nolle prosequi in a certain case. The verdict was "not guilty," with this remarkable addition: "And the jury are unanimously of opinion that in the entry of the nolle prosequi by the City Judge he has been guilty of irregularity, and it is the unanimous recommendation of the jury that Judge —— resign." He resigned.¹ In December, 1855, during a trial for murder in the Supreme Court, counsel for the defendant exclaimed: "I know the jury have too much intelligence to pay any regard to the assumptions of the Court."² A man was killed at a prize fight. The Coroner, after stating the evidence at the inquest, concluded: "If the persons implicated are tried before our Court of Sessions they will have reason to congratulate themselves, as it is a difficult matter in this city to convict a person charged with any other crime than theft."³ In January, 1856, the seat of one of the Judges of the Supreme Court was contested by two candidates, both claiming to have been elected by popular vote. Both asserted the right to sit; in opposition to the opinions of the Judges sitting, one of the contestants took and kept his seat by pure "nerve."⁴

¹ Devlin was appointed by Mayor Wood to succeed Joseph S. Taylor, deceased. At the same time Daniel D. Conover was selected for the post by the Governor, who claimed the right of appointment. The Mayor used inflammatory language, a turbulent mob gathered, and the militia had to be ordered out to prevent serious violence between the partisans of each. (Assembly Documents, 1858, No. 80.) The courts later decided in favor of Devlin.

² Devlin was removed from office by Mayor Tiemann in April, 1858.

³ Report of Special Common Council Committee, October 22, 1857.

New Charter Changes Election Time.

A new city charter, adopted in 1857, changed the date of municipal elections to the first Tuesday in December, and provided for an election for Mayor and Common Council in December, 1857. The change was aimed partly at Wood. He had probably expected severe opposition of some kind, for he had early begun planning for the continued control of the Tammany General Committee, so as to secure a renomination.

¹ Harper's New Monthly Magazine, November, 1856.

² Ibid. ³ Ibid. ⁴ Ibid.

In the primary elections, late in 1856, for delegates to this committee for 1857, a majority favorable to Wood had been elected, after violence and ballot-box stuffing in every ward. The Wood men took possession of the Wigwam and elected Wilson Small, chairman. The rival party met in another place and organized a general committee. Each put forward the claim of "regularity."

Another Quarrel Over the Hall.

As the "usages" of the party required that the "regular" committee should have legal possession of Tammany Hall, it was necessary to determine which that committee was. Then the Sachems stepped in. Seven of them—a majority of one—were Wood's personal enemies. By a vote of seven to five the Sachems concluded to order the election of a new general committee, which was to have all known Democrats enrolled into associations.

"Tammany Society," said the "seven Sachems" report,

"is the undisputed owner of Tammany Hall ; and the right to control the use of that building which is inherent in its ownership has been fully secured by the lease. The Council is determined that their action shall vindicate fully the rights and powers of the venerable society of which they are officers ; and also, prove a safe and efficient barrier against the tide of corruption and fraud which is sapping the power of the great party to which the society has adhered during the whole period of its existence."

At the society's annual election, on May 20, the Isaac V. Fowler, or "reform" ticket, had the names of some men of note—Samuel J. Tilden, Elijah F. Purdy, Peter B. Sweeny, Edward Cooper, William H. Cornell, John McKeon and Emanuel B. Hart—while Wood's candidates were inferior hack politicians and nonentities. The "seven Sachems" had previously managed to get into the Wigwam unobserved by the Wood men, and had rapidly elected nearly sixty new members, all their own partisans, to the society.¹ These voted at the election, enabling Wood's opponents to beat him by a majority of sixty.* Then the "seven Sachems" turned Wood and his men out of the Wigwam.

In a public address, the Wood men thereupon declared the society an irresponsible body of less than four hundred members, one-third of whom held no communication with the Democratic party, and that of its thirteen Sachems seven were "Libby bolters." "What, then, is the issue?" asked the address. "Shall the Sachems rule the people; or shall the people rule themselves? Shall the Sachems of this close corporation, to procure offices for themselves and friends, be permitted, unrebuked by the people, to exercise this omnipotent, dictatorial, supervisory power over the great Democratic party, its organization and interests, to rule out or rule in your general committees whenever it suits their caprice or selfish purposes?"

¹ Statement to the author by Douglas Taylor, one of the seven Sachems."

* Of this action Talcott Williams ("Tammany Hall," G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1898) says: "For the first time, the Tammany Society, which is only the landlord of the political body which leases its hall, exercised its singular power of deciding between rival organizations." This, of course, is a decided error. Repeated instances of the activity of the society in this direction have been given in this work.

Two Police Forces.

The control of the police force was considered as necessary as ever to success at the election. The changes of 1853, from which much was hoped, had proved of little benefit. The force was in a chaotic state. Political and pecuniary reasons alone guided the appointment of policemen. No record of merit was kept; there was no systematic instruction of policemen in their duties except as to drill. Some Captains wore uniforms, others refused. When an applicant appointed to the force was tested for qualifications in reading, a large newspaper was given to him, and he was told to read the title. Murder abounded, and the city was full of escaped convicts.¹ One of the most important provisions of a special act of 1857 was the transfer of the police from city control to that of the State. Unwilling to surrender so effective a hold, Wood resisted the Legislature's action. For a time there were two police departments—the Metropolitan force, under the State Commissioners, and the municipal police, under the Mayor—each contending for supremacy. One day a part of the two forces came into collision in the City Hall, and twelve men were wounded. It was found necessary to summon the militia to quell the disturbances, and Wood was arrested. Finding resistance useless, he submitted grudgingly to the new order.²

The police being so disorganized, the criminal classes

¹ Assembly Documents, 1857, II, part 2, No. 127.

² Assembly Documents, 1858, No. 80. The chaos produced during this dispute was extreme. Members of one force would seize and liberate prisoners taken by the other force, combats were frequent, and peaceable citizens were often unable to secure protection.

ran the town. Chief among Wood's supporters were the "Dead Rabbits" or "Black Birds,"—a lawless "gang" who overawed certain portions of the city and who had a rival in the "Bowery Boys," whose sole profession seems to have been to pack primaries, break ballot boxes and fight the "Dead Rabbits." On July 4, 1857, the "Dead Rabbits," presumably having nothing else to do, attacked a body of police in Jackson street. A band of "Bowery Boys" hurried to the front, and a pitched street battle ensued, pistols and muskets being procured from neighboring places. Barricades were thrown up in the most approved Parisian style. The result was the killing of ten and the wounding of eighty persons, some of whom were innocent bystanders. This was the most deadly of the numerous collisions of these "gangs." As they had a powerful political influence, the police did not molest them.¹

Various Activities of Wood.

As a member of the Metropolitan Police Commission, Mayor Wood, about this time was instrumental in giving out a contract for 4,000 glass ballot boxes, at $15 apiece. It was disclosed in James Horner's affidavit before Judge Davis, in the Supreme Court, in November of this year, that the city needed no more than 1,200 of the boxes; that Wood's brother had secured the 4,000 boxes at a cost of less than $5 apiece and that the Mayor was to share in the $40,000 of expected profits.

Wood neglected no means of ingratiating himself with the masses. The panic of 1857 suddenly deprived over

¹ This riot is briefly treated in Document No. 80.

30,000 mechanics and laborers in the city of employment. Wood proposed the employment of the idle on public works, and the buying by the city of 50,000 barrels of flour and an equal amount of other provisions to be disposed of to the needy at cost.¹ The Common Council failed to see the value of this plan, but did appropriate a sum for public works in Central Park, the better share of which went to contractors and petty politicians. To win the good will of the Roman Catholics, becoming more and more a power, the Common Council gave over to the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum a perpetual lease of the entire plot from Fifth to Fourth Avenue, Fifty-first to Fifty-second street, at a rental of $1 a year.²

So resourceful was Wood and so remarkable his political ingenuity that though he and his general committee were driven out by the Tammany Society, he nevertheless brought things about so that the Democratic convention in Tammany Hall, on October 15, renominated him for Mayor, by 75 votes to 12. The Tammany General Committee thereupon openly repudiated him, and the curious complication was presented of a candidate who was the Tammany "regular" nominee, yet opposed by both the society and the general committee.

Tiemann Elected Mayor.

Instantly a determined citizen's movement to defeat him sprang up. The city taxes had nearly doubled in the three years of Wood's administration and were now over $8,000,000, of which over $5,000,000 had already been signed away in contracts or spent in advance of collection. Yet the Common Council had recently resolved to spend the exorbitant sum of $5,000,000 on a new City Hall. The Mayor vetoed the resolution only when the most intense public opposition was manifested.

¹ Proceedings of the Board of Alderman, LXVII : 157-60.

² Ibid., LXVIII: 140.

A committee of citizens, representative of the Republicans, Democrats and Native Americans, nominated Daniel F. Tiemann, a paint dealer, and a member of Tammany Hall, but who as an Alderman and as Governor of the Almshouse had made a good record.

To Wood's support there concentrated the preponderance of the foreign born, the native rowdies and the usual mass blinded into voting for the "regular" ticket. The gamblers, brothel-keepers, emigrant runners and swindlers of every kind bought and cheated for him in the belief that the reformers would drive them from the city. Wood had taken the precaution to manufacture thousands of voters. From the Wigwam, where the Wood partisans backed up their right to meet with fists, drummers-up were sent to bring in prospective citizens. Upon promising faithfully to vote the Tammany ticket, a card, valued at fifty cents, was furnished gratuitously to each. It was addressed to a Judge who owed his election to Tammany, and read :

" Common Pleas :

" Please naturalize the bearer.

" N. Seagrist, chairman." ¹

¹ This reference to Seagrist was handed down in an Aldermanic committee's report some years before: " * * * Thomas Munday, Nicholas Seagrist, Captain Norris, Mackellar and others were charged with robbing the funeral pall of Henry Clay, when his sacred person passed through this city." Documents of the Board of Aldermen, XXII: No. 43.

From 3,000 to 4,000 voters, it was estimated, were turned out by this process.

The sentiment of certain politicians may be taken from John Cochrane's¹ remark that "he would vote for the devil incarnate if nominated by Tammany Hall." Meanwhile they took care to make out Wood to be a much-abused man. At the ratification meeting in Tammany Hall, on November 23, long resolutions were passed, fulsomely flattering Wood and asking voters to remember that if Wood was assailed, so Jefferson, Jackson and Daniel Webster were pursued to their graves by harpies. The voters were asked not to be deceived by the abuse of the graceless, godless characters and disappointed demagogues.

Wood and his partisans strained every nerve for success. But it was a futile effort. The opposition won, Tiemann receiving 43,216 votes, to 40,889 for Wood. His large vote, however, showed the dangerous strength of the worst classes of the city, and boded ill for the years to come.

Wood Undismayed by Defeat.

The opposition of the Tammany Society and the general committee having been responsible for his defeat, Wood made renewed efforts to regain sway over both. On their part, elated at his supposed downfall, the Anti-¹ Cochrane later followed Wood into Mozart Hall, but subsequently returned to Tammany Hall. He was elected to Congress, serving one term. He raised a regiment at the outbreak of the Civil War, and in June, 1862, was made a Brigadier-General. He was elected Attorney-General of the State in 1868. In 1872 he joined the Greeley movement. He held various local offices, both in 1872 and in 1883 being elected to the Presidency of the Board of Aldermen. As late as 1889 he was a Sachem. He died in 1898, in his 85th year.

Wood members of the general committee decided to expel Daniel E. Sickles and C. Godfrey Gunther, two of his supporters, and met for that purpose in the Wigwam on December 9, 1857.

Wood's followers thought proper to impress upon the general committee a sense of their strength. Accordingly, their fighting men were present in full force, awaiting an opportunity to mingle in the proceedings. The probability of a violent row increasing momentarily, the Metropolitan police were summoned to Tammany Hall. For a time they kept the hostiles within bounds; but the bar was well patronized, and large delegations of the "Dead Rabbits" and "shoulder-hitters" from the wards were flowing in constantly.

At 9 o'clock a desperate fight was begun in the center of the bar-room, amid intense excitement. By using their clubs unsparingly, the forty policemen succeeded in separating the combatants, though not before a young man, Cornelius Woods, had been shot in the shoulder with a slug. Unwilling to draw upon themselves the resentment of the influential ward politicians, the police made no arrests. The meeting broke up without definite action being taken in the matter of expelling the two supporters of Wood.

The first and chief point in the struggle for the control of the organization was, as usual, the control of the Tammany Society. Both factions were alive to this necessity. On April 13, 1858, 150 members of the society met at the Westchester House, Bowery and Broome streets, where it was announced that 212 members were pledged to vote for Anti-Wood Sachems. Some of these members were seeking the ascendancy for their own benefit, while others were not active in politics at all, but had become disgusted with Wood's methods and men. At the election, six days later, the Anti-Wood ticket, headed by Isaac V. Fowler and Nelson J. Waterbury, won by a majority of nearly 100, 378 members voting. More than twenty members who had not been at an election of the society for twenty years or more, and a large number who had eschewed voting for ten years, hastened, some from distances, to deposit their votes. Three came from Hudson, a number from Albany, two from Washington, and one from Cincinnati.

Wood Driven from the Organization.

The result was Wood's forced withdrawal from the organization. He immediately started a Democratic organization opposed to Tammany and upon the same lines. It was known generally as "Mozart Hall," from the name of the assembly room in which it met. Wood denounced Tammany, declaring that its nominees were chosen by five members of the Tammany Society, in a parlor, and ferociously expressed his determination to wage war upon the society as long as he lived until (this reservation was added) "it opened its doors."

Each hall, as a matter of political business, made the most virtuous and the strongest claims of being the true Democratic organization. Each execrated the other and announced itself as the sole, valiant, sincere upholder of Democracy.

Wood's enemies made haste to guarantee their ascendancy when, on December 28, the Sachems ordered elections for the committees to be held on December 30, thus giving but one day's notice of the event.

Moreover, they forced upon all persons accepting membership in the committees, a pledge that in case of their election they would support the Tammany organization and all nominations made under its authority, and disclaim allegiance to any other organization, party or clique.

Anti-Tammany Council Elected.

The election of delegates to the various nominating conventions, in the Fall of 1858, was attended by the customary disorder. Wood's partisans were everywhere inciting trouble. At O'Connell's Hall, on Mulberry street, a crowd, seeing that the result was unfavorable to their side, split the ballot boxes and threw them into the street. The "Dead Rabbits," scenting trouble, appeared hastily, and a fight ensued on Hester street, in which two of them were shot.

This municipal election was the first in which the Democratic voters of Irish nativity or lineage insisted on a full share of the best places on the party's ticket. Previously they had seldom been allowed any local office above Coroner. Their dominance on the Tammany ticket again roused the "Know-Nothing" sentiment, and a combination of Native Americans, Republicans and independents resulted. The combination secured 16 of the 24 Councilmen.

Supervisors and the Election Boards.

The politicians were now confronted with a registry act, which omitted the blunder of that of 1840 in applying only to New York City. This measure became a law in 1859, despite the stubborn opposition of Tammany, some of whose leaders, Isaac V. Fowler and others, issued an address asking Democrats to arise and defeat it. Failing to defeat it, they resolved to circumvent it by means of the Board of Supervisors, which was required to appoint the registry clerks. This body was by law divided equally as to politics, the Legislature calculating that this would insure fair dealing. But by the purchase of the vote of one of the Republican Supervisors for $2,500,¹ the Tammany members were enabled not only to redistrict the city to their own advantage, but to appoint trusted tools as registrars. For appearances' sake they allowed a Republican registry clerk here and there. Of 609 registrars appointed, the Republicans secured about 75; and of the whole 609, 68 were liquor-sellers, 92 were petty office-holders, 34 were supposed gamblers, and 50 of the names were not in the city directory. The Tammany leaders held daily private caucuses, and made a list of henchmen with extreme care, in order to exclude Wood from any influence with the registry clerks. William M. Tweed, a member of the board, generally named the men, and Elijah F. Purdy boasted that Tammany demanded the appointment of none but Democrats, and that they (the Tammany Supervisors) meant to sustain their party at any and all hazards. Having the registry clerks, Tammany Hall could revel in false registry and repeating.

¹ Statement of William M. Tweed before a special investigating committee of the Board of Aldermen, 1877 (Document No. 8, Documents of the Board of Aldermen, Vol. II: 15-16). Isaac V. Fowler, Tweed testified, furnished the $2,500 which was paid to Peter R. Voorhis, a Republican member. Tweed further stated, that besides himself there were in the conspiracy Elijah F. Purdy, William C. Conner, Isaac Bell, Jr. (a Sachem) and John R. Briggs.

Good citizens, dejected at the outlook, were sure of a repetition of the frauds of former years.

Wood Again Elected Mayor.

Seeking to satisfy all parties, Mayor Tiemann failed to satisfy any. He was accused of using the official patronage for the advantage of Tammany Hall, in the hope of getting a renomination from it in 1859. He and his chief office-holders appointed to office the most notorious fighting men and ruffians in the city. The Tammany leaders did not favor him, possibly because they thought William F. Havemeyer a man of more weight, popularity and respectability.

Accordingly they nominated the latter. Wood had himself nominated by Mozart Hall, and the Republicans chose George P. Opdyke, a millionaire. In this triangular contest the Tammany men felt that the force of Havemeyer's good record would put them in power. Singularly, however, with all its manipulation of the registry lists, and the excellent character of its nominee, Tammany lost. The Irish voters sided almost solidly with Wood, and the lowest classes of the city, fearing the election of a man so distasteful to them as Havemeyer or Opdyke, used all their effectiveness for Wood, who received 29,940 votes, against 26,913 for Havemeyer, and 21,417 for Opdyke.

It was conceded that much of the worst part of Tammany's strength had gone over to Wood. This fact was suggestive, to a degree, of Wood's assurance, considering the declaration in his letter of acceptance of the nomination that he favored "excluding the bullies and rowdies from public employment and of dealing summarily with that class of outlaws."

Although Tammany had nominated a good man, for the sake of sidling into power upon the strength of his reputation, its lesser candidates were generally incompetent or of bad character ; half a dozen of its nominees for Councilmen were under indictment for various crimes.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE CIVIL WAR, AND AFTER.

1859-1867.

The stirring years of the Civil War were drawing near. In this crisis, Tammany, ever pro-slavery, dealt in no equivocal phrases. On November 1, 1859, at a meeting called to order by Isaac V. Fowler, James T. Brady, acting as president, referred to John Brown's raid as "riot, treason and murder." Brady and others spoke dolefully of the dire consequences of a continuation of the abolition agitation and prophesied that if the "irrepressible conflict" ever came, it would result in an extermination of the black race.

Fowler's Downfall.

But Grand Sachem Fowler was not to officiate at any more meetings. He had been living for several years at a rate far beyond his means. In one year his bill at the New York Hotel, which he made the Democratic headquarters, amounted to $25,000.¹ He had spent $50,000 toward the election of Buchanan. A social favorite, he gave frequent and lavish entertainments.² President Pierce had appointed him Postmaster, but ¹ Statement to the author by Douglas Taylor, then his private secretary.

² Fowler was an exception to the average run of the leaders who preceded him, in that he was a college graduate and moved in the best social circles. With a view of bettering the "tone" of the Wigwam, he had induced a number of rich young men to join the organization.

the salary was only $2,500 a year, and he had long ago exhausted his private means and much of the property of his family. It was therefore a source of wonder whence his money came. The problem was cleared up when, on May 10, 1860, he was removed from office, and an order was issued for his arrest under the accusation of having embezzled $155,000.¹ The filching, it appeared, had been going on since 1855.²

Isaiah Rynders, then United States Marshal at New York, upon receiving orders to arrest Fowler, went to his hotel, but tarried at the bar and by his loud announcement of his errand, allowed word to be taken to Fowler, who forthwith escaped. He subsequently made his way to Mexico. His brother, John Walker Fowler, who upon recommendation of the "seven Sachems" had been appointed clerk to Surrogate Gideon J. Tucker, subsequently absconded with $31,079.65 belonging to orphans and others.³

Frauds Against Lincoln Electors.

In 1860 Tammany was greatly instrumental in inducing the Democrats of New York State to agree upon a fusion Douglas-Bell-Breckenridge electoral ticket. On the registration and election days the frauds practised against the Lincoln electors surpassed anything the city had known. In the Third Ward 63 fictitious names were registered in a single election district. Five hundred of the 3,500 names of the Twelfth Ward register were found to be fraudulent. In the Seventeenth Ward 935 names on the registry books were spurious, no persons representing them being discoverable at the places given as their residences. An Irish widow's two boys, six and seven years old respectively, were registered, mother and sons, of course, knowing nothing of it—and soon ad libitum. Fictitious names, accredited to vacant lots or uninhabited buildings, were voted by the thousands. The announcement of the result gave the Fusionists 62,611 votes, and Lincoln 33,311.

¹ Report of Postmaster-General Holt, Senate Documents, 1st Session, 36th Congress, XI, No. 48. Also Postmaster-General Holt's communication to James J. Roosevelt, United States District Attorney, at New York, Ibid., XIII, No. 91: 11.

² Nelson J. Waterbury, Grand Sachem (1862), was at this time, and had been for several years, Fowler's Assistant Postmaster.

³ Statement by Mr. Tucker to the author. Confirmed by reference to report of Charles E. Wilbour to the Board of Supervisors, May 26, 1870.

Attitude on the War.

At the outbreak of the war, Mozart Hall, for purposes of political display, took a prompt position in favor of maintaining the Union, although Wood, its master spirit, advocated, in a public message, the detaching of New York City from the Union and transforming it into a free city on the Hamburg plan.¹ Tammany, perforce, had to follow the lead of Mozart Hall in parading its loyalist sentiments. The society raised a regiment, which was taken to the field in June, 1861, by Grand Sachem William D. Kennedy.² Tammany long dwelt upon this action as a crowning proof of its patriotism.

The real sentiments of the bulk of Tammany and of Mozart Hall were to the contrary. Both did their best to paralyze the energies of Lincoln's administration. In a speech to his Mozart Hall followers at the Volks Garden, on November 27, 1861, Wood charged the national administration with having provoked the war, and said that they (the administration) meant to prolong it while there was a dollar to be stolen from the national Treasury or a drop of Southern blood to be shed. At the Tammany celebration of July 4, 1862, Grand Sachem Nelson J. Waterbury, though expressing loyalty to the Union, averred that it was the President's duty "to set his foot firmly upon abolitionism and crush it to pieces, and then the soldiers would fight unembarrassed, and victory must soon sit upon the National banners." Declarations of this kind were generally received with enthusiasm in both halls.

¹ Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, LXXXI: 25-26.

² This regiment was the Forty-second New York Infantry. Kennedy died a few days after the arrival in Washington, and was succeeded by a regular army officer. The Forty-second took part in thirty-six battles and engagements. Its record stood: killed, 92; wounded, 328; missing, 296.

At times, however, under the sting of severe public criticism, Tammany Hall made haste to assert its fealty to the Union cause. In September, 1861, Elijah F. Purdy, chairman of its general committee, issued a statement that "Tammany Hall had maintained an unswerving position upon this great question from the time the first gun was fired to the present hour. It has been zealously devoted to the Union, in favor of upholding it with the utmost resources of the nation, and opposed to any action calculated to embarrass the Government or to prevent all loyal men from standing together in solid column for the country." Tammany put forth the claim that "three-fourths of the volunteer soldiers enlisted in this city and at the seat of war, are Democrats attached to Tammany Hall;" and on October 3, 1861, resolved that with a deep sense of the peril in which the Union and the constitution were involved by the reckless war being waged for their destruction by armed traitors, it (Tammany Hall) held it to be the first and most sacred duty of every man who loved his country to support the Government.

A Reign of Corruption.

The war, which so engaged and diverted the popular mind, served as a cover for the continued manipulation of primaries and conventions, and the consummation of huge schemes of public plunder. Wood himself pointed out that from 1850 to 1860 the expenses of the city government had increased from over $3,200,000 to $9,758,000, yet his tenure of office from 1860 to 1862 was characterized by even worse corruption than had flourished so signally in his previous terms. After his installation, in 1860 it was charged that he had sold the office of City Inspector to Samuel Downes, a man of wealth, for $20,000; that Downes had paid $10,000 to certain confederates of Wood, and that he had afterward been cheated out of the office. Another charge, the facts of which were related in a presentment by the Grand Jury, accused Wood of robbing the taxpayers of $420,000. The Common Council had awarded a five-years' street-cleaning contract to Andrew J. Hackley, at $279,000 a year, notwithstanding the fact that one among other responsible persons had bid $84,000 a year less. Afraid to submit the contract to the ordeal of public opinion, which might give rise to injunctions, the Common Council sped it through both boards on the same night. Waiting in his office until nearly midnight for the express purpose of signing it, the Mayor hastily affixed his signature the moment it reached him.

The Grand Jury found that the sum of $40,000 in bribes had been raised and paid for the passage of the contract. It was asserted that the equivalent Wood received for signing the bill was one-fourth the amount of the contract, or $69,750 a year, for five years, free of any other consideration than his signature, the other beneficiaries of the contract supplying all the money needed to protect the fraud. Spurred on by public opinion, the police—when the work was not done in compliance with the contract—had reported to the Controller, who had refused to pay the monthly bills. Then the contractors reduced the pay of their laborers from $1.25 to 95 cents a day in order to make good their payments to Wood.¹

Hiram Ketchum, in November, 1861, publicly accused Wood of promising two men—Woodruff and Hoffman—Mozart Hall nominations for Judgeships, upon which they each paid $5,000 in checks to Wood's account for "election expenses." Pocketing the money, Wood then made an agreement with Tammany to unite on two other men—Monell and Barbour—for Judges, on condition that Tammany should not unite with the Republicans against him in the December Mayoralty election.

S. B. Chittenden, a citizen of wealth and standing, charged, in Cooper Institute, November 26, 1861, that the signature of the Street Cleaning Commissioner necessary for certain documents could be bought for ¹ Hackley, in fact, received $279,000 for only six months' work. During the two years "for which he received full pay he has not done more than one year's actual work in cleaning the city, as the returns in this department abundantly prove." Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1863, part 1, No. 4.

$2,500, and intimated that Wood was not dissociated from the procedure.

Wood had spent an enormous amount in his political schemes. He himself admitted, according to the testimony of A. W. Craven, Chief Engineer of the Croton Aqueduct Department, before a committee of Aldermen, "that his object in removing heads of departments was to get control of the departments, so that he could put in those who would co-operate with him and, also, could pay off his obligations."¹

It is possible to give only an outline of the "jobs" stealthily put through the Common Council. Newspaper criticism was, in a measure, silenced by appropriations of from $10,000 to $20,000 a year for "advertising," though occasional exposures were made in spite of this. One of these related to the appropriation of $105,000 in July, 1860, for a few days' entertainment of the Japanese Embassy in New York. Of this sum only a few thousand dollars were used for the purpose, the rest being stolen.²

Never more than now was patriotism shown to be the last refuge of scoundrels. Taking advantage of the war excitement, the most audacious designs on the city treasury were executed under color of acts of the purest patriotism. At a special meeting of the Common Council, on August 21, 1861, called ostensibly to help the families of the poor volunteers, a measure providing for the appointment of twenty-two Street Opening Commissioners was hurriedly passed, upon motion of Alderman Terence Farley, against whom several untried indictments were pending. Without entering into details, it can be said that this action represented a theft of $250,000, in that the Commissioners were superfluous, and their offices were created merely to make more places for a hungry host of political workers.

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1860-61, XXIX, No. 18.

² The original appropriation had been $30,000. The joint Council committee, of which Francis I. A. Boole was the head, submitted bills for alleged expenditures aggregating $125,000. Boole explained that his colleagues considered this sum excessive, and would therefore "knock off" $20,000. Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1861, No. 17.

The Legislature Dies with the Council.

If the city was a richer prize than ever to the politicians, the Legislature was no less desirable. Alien members of both branches of that body were under the complete domination of political managers. It was notorious that the Democratic and the Republican lobby lords exchanged the votes of their respective legislative vassals, so that it mattered little to either which political party had the ascendancy in the Legislature. One celebrated lobbyist declared that it was cheaper to buy, than to elect, a Legislature. The passage of five franchises by the Legislature, on April 17, 1860, over Gov. Morgan's veto, cost the projectors upwards of $250,000 in money and stock.¹

Tammany and Mozart Agree on Fusion.

Apparently hostile, the leaders of Tammany and of Mozart Hall soon saw that it was to their mutual benefit to have a secret understanding as to the division of the spoils. While Mozart had supremacy for the moment, Tammany had superior advantages. It could point to a long record; its organization was perfect; it had a perpetual home, and the thousands of its disappointed ward-workers and voters who had transferred their allegiance to Mozart, in the hope of better reward, would certainly flow back in time. This changing about was an old feature of New York politics. A successful political party was always depleted by thousands of office-seekers who left its ranks because disappointed in their hopes. Most important of all, Tammany had dealt the decisive blow to Mozart Hall at the Charleston convention, in 1860, and at the Syracuse convention, in September, 1861, when its delegation secured the recognition of "regularity."

¹ For this and other instances see "The History of Public Franchises in New York City," by the author.

Citizens' Movement Successful.

Hence Mozart Hall, to avoid losing the State offices, willingly bargained with Tammany, and in the Fall of 1861 the two combined on nominees for the Legislature. They could not agree on the Mayoralty, Wood determining to stand for re-election. But true to their agreement not to ally themselves with the Republicans, the Tammany leaders nominated independently, selecting C. Godfrey Gunther. Once more a non-partisan movement sprang up to combat the forces of corruption. The People's Union, composed of Republicans and Democrats, succeeded, despite the usual frauds, in electing George P. Opdyke, a Republican, by less than 1,000 plurality, he receiving 25,380 votes; Gunther, 24,767; and Wood 24,167. In violation of the law, returns in ten districts were held back for evident purposes of manipulation. When the figures showed Opdyke's election, attempts were made to deprive him of his certificate on the pretence that the returns as published in the daily newspapers were inaccurate. After much counting by the Board of Aldermen, whose attempt at "counting-out" Opdyke was frustrated by the vigilance of his friends, the latter was declared elected by 613 plurality.

Newspaper accounts described a lively time, quite in keeping with a long line of precedents, in Tammany Hall on election night. The crowd was in unpleasant humor because of Gunther's defeat. When "Jimmy" Nesbit, a good-natured heeler of the Sixth Ward, was called upon to preside, he tried to evoke cheers for Gunther. Chafing at the lack of enthusiasm, he swore fiercely at his hearers. A shout was heard, "Three cheers for Fernando Wood," whereupon the eminent chairman lost his equanimity and let fly a pitcher at the offender's head. He was on the point of heaving another missile, a large pewter pitcher, but a bystander caught his hand. Cries of "Tammany is not dead yet," were heard; and then Chauncey Shaeffer regaled the crowd with the information that he got his first meal, with liquor thrown in, at Tammany Hall, sixteen years before, and he would never desert her. Shaeffer told the Tammanyites how he had gone to the White House and advised the President to let out the job of putting down the rebellion to Tammany Hall. Cries broke forth of, "You're drunk, Shaeffer!" "You're a disgrace to Tammany Hall." After trying to sing "The Red, White and Blue," Shaeffer stumbled off the platform. Isaiah Rynders then arose, and after denouncing the leaders for not being there, assured his hearers that there were many respectable gentlemen present and some d——d fools. This edifying meeting ended by "the chairman jumping from the platform and chasing a Wood man out of the room."

Campaign of 1862.

Though no longer in office, Wood was still a powerful factor, since Mozart Hall, of which he was the head, could poll, or pretend to poll, 25,000 votes. Further overtures were made between him and the leaders of Tammany in 1862, with the result that an understanding was reached to divide the nominations equally. The partition was conducted amicably until the office of Surrogate was reached. Besides this there was an odd member of the Assembly not accounted for. The leaders could not agree as to how these two offices should be disposed of, and on the evening of October 2 the general committee met in the Wigwam to discuss the profound problem. Crowds were gathered inside and outside the hall, in the lobby, bar-room and on the stairs. The excitement was such that a squad of police was sent to the scene to maintain peace.

Their services were needed. Heated discussions had been going on all the evening. Richard B. Connolly had his "party" on hand, eager for the fray. Francis I. A. Boole mustered his retainers by the score—"fine strapping fellows, with upturned sleeves and significant red shirts that told of former battles and hard-earned laurels." At 11 o'clock the fighting began. It had not progressed far, however, when the police charged, and wielding their clubs right and left, drove the combatants in disorder into the street. The committee was in session nearly all night, but a renewal of the scrimmage was not attempted.

After much haggling, the factions finally agreed. Nominations brought such great sums that the severe contention of the leaders is easily explainable. A hint of the enormous sums wrung from this source was given by Judge Maynard, when addressing a meeting of the "Representative Democracy," in Cooper Union, on October 27, 1863. He stated that one man in Mozart Hall (doubtless referring to Fernando Wood) was the chief of all the "strikers" in New York City, and that this person made from $100,000 to $200,000 every year marketing offices.¹ Nominations and appointments went to the highest bidders, and some of the leaders held as many as thirteen different offices each. At the same meeting W. R. Ranken stated that "the manner in which these two organizations—Tammany and Mozart Hall—have packed their preliminary conventions and organizations, has been of such a character as to bring the blush of shame to every man of principle in the party. No man, were he to poll 10,000 votes, under those primary elections, could be admitted within the precincts of Tammany Hall unless he came with the indorsement of the Election Inspectors who were under the influence of the two or three men who held the reins of power there."²

¹ This speech was reprinted in the New York Herald, October 28, 1863. The Herald was known as Wood's special organ.

² In a remarkable report handed down in 1862 by a select committee of the Board of Aldermen, the admission was made that the "primary elections are notoriously and proverbially the scenes of the most disgraceful fraud, chicanery and violence. They are without legal restraint or regulation, nor can such restraint or regulation be imposed upon them. Peaceable and orderly citizens, almost without exception, refuse to attend these meetings." Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1862, XXXIV, No. 7.

The State and Congressional elections in November showed the power of the combined halls. Seymour, for Governor, carried the city by 31,309 plurality. Among the Democratic Congressmen elected was Fernando Wood, who, evidently despairing of again filling the Mayor's chair, had determined to employ his activities in another field.

Hackett's Opinion of Wood.

The city election for minor officers occurred in December, and the two halls again won. The apportionment of the offices, however, caused a number of clashes. One of the offices filled was that of Corporation Counsel, the nomination to which fell to the lot of Mozart Hall. Wood had promised it to John K. Hackett, subsequently Recorder, but gave it to John E. Devlin, a Sachem, supposed to be one of Wood's bitterest opponents. By way of smoothing Hackett's ire, Wood promised to have him appointed Corporation Attorney. This promise was also broken. Hackett went to Wood's house and was shown into his parlor. "Mr. Wood," said Hackett, as soon as the man who had been thrice Mayor of the metropolis of America appeared, "I called to say to you, personally, that you are a scoundrel, a rascal and a perjured villain." Wood threatened to put him out and rang the bell. As the servant was on the point of entering, Hackett drew a revolver from his pocket and went on: "If that man comes between us, I shall blow out his brains and cut off your ears. So you may as well listen. On a certain night, in a room of the Astor House, were four persons, Mr. D., Mr. X., Mr. Y., and yourself. One of these four is a scoundrel, a rascal, a perjured villain and a hound. It is not Mr. D., nor Mr. X., nor Mr. Y. Who he is, I leave you to imagine."

Another Reform Mayor Elected.

The degraded state of politics, sinking yearly still lower, caused unspeakable disgust, but the honest element of the citizenship seemed powerless. The occasional election of a reform Mayor made little difference in the situation, for either through the impotence of his position or his personal incompetency, the spoilsmen managed to prevail. The Common Council was the supreme power, and this body Tammany, or Tammany and Mozart together, generally controlled. The public money was spent as the Aldermen pleased. The Mayor's veto became a legal fiction, for a bare majority¹ sufficed to overcome it, and this could generally be secured through deals and the trading of votes on one another's "jobs." The veto, in the words of a later Mayor, amounted "to nothing more than the publication of his remonstrance in corporation newspapers, to cause a few hours' delay and excite the contempt of the members [of the Common Council] who have determined to carry their measure in spite of his remonstrance."²

Public indignation resulted in another Anti-Tammany demonstration of strength in 1863. The Wigwam nominated for Mayor, Francis I. A. Boole, generally considered as nauseating a type of the politician as Tammany could bring forth. Independent Democrats and some Republicans thereupon rallied to the support of C. Godfrey Gunther, nominee of a new "reform" organization—the "McKeon Democracy." The Republican organization, however, stood apart, nominating Orison Blunt. Gunther was elected, receiving 29,121 votes, to 22,579 for Boole, and 19,383 for Blunt. At this, as in previous elections, there were unmistakable Wigwam frauds, such as repeating and altering election returns.

¹ The reformers of the city had unsuccessfully sought to incorporate in the charter of 1853, a clause requiring a two-thirds vote to overcome a veto.

² Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1865 part 1, No. 1.

The Wigwam and McClellan.

Hitherto, in Presidential conventions since Van Buren's time, the Democratic candidates had been nominated against Tammany's resistance, the organization having had each time a candidate of its own whom it sought to force on the convention. In 1864, however, the Wigwam shrewdly anticipated the action of the Chicago convention by recommending McClellan as the Democratic nominee. On the night of McClellan's nomination, Tammany held a ratification meeting in the City Hall Park, denounced "the imbecility of the administration of Abraham Lincoln" in the conduct of the war and "its ruinous financial policy," and declared that it had "forfeited the confidence of the loyal States; usurped powers not granted by the constitution; endeavored to render the executive, aided by the military, superior to the judicial and legislative branches of the Government, and assumed to destroy life and confiscate property by its unconstitutional proclamations." Again, on November 16, at a meeting of the general committee, George W. Purser, a lobbyist and organization leader, offered a resolution, which was unanimously approved, practically declaring the war a failure.

In this election the Republicans took precautions to prevent repetition of the frauds of preceding years. An investigation disclosed illegal registration on a large scale. To hold the lawless in check, Gen. Benjamin F. Butler was ordered to New York. He brought 6,000 of his own troops, with artillery and a regiment of regulars, which he kept within call outside of the city until after the election, and he established a civilian system of surveillance in every election district. An unusually orderly election was the result, though fraud was not entirely suppressed, and it was charged that both sides were parties to it. McClellan received a majority in the city of 37,023, of the total vote of 110,433.

Wigwam Mayoralty Candidate Withdrawn.

In 1865 Tammany again nominated Francis I. A. Boole for Mayor. Boole, as City Inspector, was the head of a department which embraced the Street Cleaning and Health Bureaus. Daniel B. Badger testified before the Senate Investigating Committee of 1865 that in the previous year he had put in a written bid to clean the streets for $300,000, but when it was opened, Boole announced loudly that it was $500,000, and gave the contract elsewhere, with the consequence that it cost $800,000 to clean the streets in 1864.¹ Many witnesses swore that they paid various sums, ranging about $200 each, for positions under Boole, only to be suddenly dismissed later.² A surprising number of men were on Boole's payrolls who had other business and who appeared only to draw their salaries.³ The filthy condition of the city entailed a fearful sacrifice of life, the average deaths yearly being no less than 33 in 1,000.¹

¹ Senate Documents, 1865, II., No. 38: 75-76.

² Ibid., 166-70, etc. ³ Ibid., 252-56.

Nearly all the 220 Health Wardens and special inspectors under Boole were illiterate and unfit. One of them testified that he thought "the term 'hygienic' meant the odor arising from stagnant water."²

Boole, about this time, was engaged in other activities than the protection of the city's health. In a suit brought by William Elmer against Robert Milbank in the Superior Court, in 1867, Milbank testified that he had called upon Boole to learn how he could secure the passage of an ordinance allowing the People's Gas Light Company to lay pipes in the streets. Boole referred him to Charles E. Loew,³ a clerk in the Common Council, and later County Clerk, and a noted Tammany figure. Milbank gave Loew $20,000 cash⁴ and $30,000 in stock, whereupon the Common Council passed the ordinance on the same night.

Public criticism was so caustic that Tammany withdrew Boole and nominate John T. Hoffman, a man of some popularity and considerable ability. The Mozart faction

¹ City Inspector's Report for 1863. The wretched condition of the city about this time caused the Legislature to establish the Metropolitan Board of Health, to have jurisdiction over the counties of New York, Kings, Westchester and Richmond counties and certain other territory. This board's first report declared that the hygienic conditions of the city were disgusting and horrible; that epidemics were frequent, and that one-third of the deaths occurring in New York and Brooklyn were due to zymotic diseases. See report of Metropolitan Board of Health, 1866: 133.

² Senate Documents, 1865, No. 38.

³ Loew was several times a Sachem, holding that rank as late as 1886.

⁴ See Judgment Roll (1867) in the Superior Court docket and Exhibit A, forming part of the bill of particulars.

nominated John Hecker, a religious and political enthusiast of narrow views, but acceptable to the Mozart "boys" or "strikers," because of his willingness to supply an abundance of money. Smith Ely, Jr., urged Hecker to withdraw, as his candidacy was hopeless. "Mr. Ely," said Hecker, "you form your opinions in the ordinary way of a business man and politician, but I receive my impressions directly from on High." The Republicans nominated Marshall O. Roberts, and the "McKeon Democracy" renominated Gunther.

Frauds were as common as ever. It was well established that 15,000 persons who had registered could not be found at the places given as their residences. In the disreputable districts, upon which Tammany depended for a large vote, a non-Tammany speaker was in actual danger of his life. Hoffman received 32,820 votes; Roberts, 31,657; Hecker, 10,390, and Gunther, 6,758.

Hoffman's Administration and Re-Election.

There is little to say of Hoffman's administration. Frauds and thefts of every description continued as before, though it is not possible to connect his name with any of them. His popularity grew. The Tammany Society elected him Grand Sachem, the Democratic State Committee named him for Governor in 1866,¹ and toward the end of his term as Mayor he was renominated for that office. Fernando Wood again came forth as the Mozart Hall nominee, and the Republicans selected William A. Darling. Hoffman swept everything before him (December, 1867), receiving 63,061 votes, to 22,837 for Wood, and 18,483 for Darling.

¹ He was defeated by Reuben E. Fenton.

Preponderance of Alien Voters.

The total vote was 104,481, an increase of 22,779 in two years. The reasons for this astounding augmentation were no secret to any one. Repeating was one cause, and false registration was another; in one ward alone—the Eighteenth—in this election, 1,500 fraudulent registrations were discovered. But the main cause was illegal naturalization. In the Supreme Court and the Court of Common Pleas, citizens were turned out at the rate, often, of about 1,000 a day. The State census of 1865 gave the city 51,500 native and 77,475 naturalized voters.¹ The figures were doubtless false, probably having been swelled to allow fraudulent totals at the polls to come within the limits of an officially declared total of eligible voters. Nevertheless, the figures are significant of the proportion of aliens to natives. The predominance of the former, moreover, was daily made greater through the connivance of corrupt Judges with the frauds of the politicians. The bulk of these aliens added to the hopelessness of the local situation. With their European ideas and training, and their ignorance of our political problems, they became the easy prey of the ward “bosses” and aided in imposing upon the city a reign of unexampled corruption.

Rise of the “Boss.”

Heretofore the Tammany organization had been held in the control of constantly changing combinations. Duumvirates, triumvirates and cliques of various numbers of men had risen, prospered and passed away. The period is now reached when the power became centralized in one man. Fernando Wood had illustrated the feasibility of the "boss" system; William M. Tweed now appeared to develop it to its highest pitch. The "boss" was the natural result of the recognized political methods. Where, as in previous times, three or four or half a dozen leaders had put their wits together and dictated and sold nominations, Tweed, astute, unprincipled and thoroughly versed in the most subterranean phases of ward politics, now gathered this power exclusively in his own hands. How he and his followers used it was disclosed in the operations of the extraordinary Tweed, or Tammany "Ring."

¹ From 1847 to 1860, 2,671,745 emigrants landed at the Port of New York. Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1861, XXVIII, No. 5. In 1855 the native voters in New York City had numbered 46,178, and the aliens, 42,704.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE TWEED "RING."

1867-1870.

The Tweed "Ring" was, in a measure, the outgrowth of the act of 1857 creating the Board of Supervisors. The Whigs, and their successors, the Republicans, had up to that year held the legislative power of the State for the greater part of ten years, during which their chief concern had been the devising of means for keeping down the Democratic majority in New York City. Their legislation was directed to the transferring of as much as they could of the government of the city to State officials, a change generally welcomed by the honest part of the citizenship, on account of the continuous misgovernment inflicted by city officials.

The real result of these transfers, however, was merely to make two strongholds of corruption instead of one. The Republican power in Albany and the Tammany power in New York City found it to their interests to arrange terms for the distribution of patronage and booty. Accordingly, as one means to that end, the Board of Supervisors for New York County was created. It was founded strictly as a State institution. Unlike the Boards of Supervisors of other counties, it had no power to tax. It could only ascertain and levy the taxes decreed by the State Legislature, which was required to pass yearly a special act declaring the amount necessary for the maintenance of the city government. It was to be an elective body, and each side was to have an equal quota of the twelve members. But in the first board convened, this delicate balance was upset, as has been shown, by the buying of a Republican member, which in effect gave Tammany a majority.

The First "Boss."

William M. Tweed was born in Cherry street in 1823. He spent the usual life of a New York boy. His father was a chairmaker in good circumstances and gave his children a fair education. Fascinated, as were most New York boys of the period, with the life of a volunteer fireman, he became a runner with Engine 12 before he was of age, and in 1849 he was elected foreman of another fire company. Carrying a silver-mounted trumpet, a white fire-coat over his arm and wearing an old-fashioned stiff hat, he led the ropes. So popular was young Tweed that he became a powerful factor in ward politics, and gifted with the qualities that counted most in those circles, he was not slow in utilizing his popularity. The Americus Club, for a long time Tweed's favorite quarters, and at times the place where Tammany politics were determined, was started with him as its foremost luminary.

Though defeated for Assistant Alderman in 1850, he was elected the next year and served in the "Forty Thieves" Board. He was a delegate, in 1852, to the Congressional convention of the Fifth District, composed of two East Side wards of New York City, and Williamsburg. A deadlock ensued, through each of two candidates polling forty-four votes. Finally the Williamsburg delegates "threw over" their favorite and voted for Tweed, who as chairman of the convention, cast the deciding vote for himself, with the statement that "Tweedie never goes back on Tweedie." He was elected, but beaten for re-election, in 1854, by the "Know-Nothings." The latter he fought so persistently that he became known as the champion of the foreign element. He was made a Sachem of the Tammany Society because of his extreme popularity, and in 1857 he was elected to the Board of Supervisors. Selling his business of chairmaking, he thereupon devoted his entire time to politics.

The first "ring" was the Supervisors' "Ring," founded in 1859 by the Democrats in the board for the purpose of procuring the appointment of Inspectors of Election.¹ One member of the board, as already shown, was bribed by a present of $2,500 to stay away from a session when the Inspectors were appointed. Tweed was so well pleased with the success of this scheme that he was inspired to wider efforts. Aided by two men—Walter Roche and John R. Briggs—he began a systematic course of lobbying before the Board of Aldermen in support of excessive bills for supplies. He and his associates collected heavy tribute on every successful bill.

¹ Documents of the Board of Aldermen, 1877, part 2, No. 8: 15-16. This document, embodying the full confession of Tweed before a special investigating committee, will be frequently referred to in this and the following chapter. Its value as a support to many of the statements made in the text of this work rests upon the credibility of Tweed's word. The best opinion is that Tweed told the approximate truth. He was not a vengeful man; he was, at the time, old, and broken in power and health; he had no reason for concealment or evasion, and it is unlikely, considering his moral temperament, that he would have made false statements for the purpose of involving innocent men, or of adding to the sum of venality already proved against the guilty.

His prestige was not visibly lessened by his defeat for Sheriff, in 1861, by James Lynch, a popular Irishman. In the same year he was elected chairman of the Tammany General Committee. This instantly made him a person of great political importance. But his grasp was yet insecure, since a hostile body of Sachems might at any time declare the general committee "irregular." Recognizing this, he planned to dominate the society by having himself elected Grand Sachem. Holding these two positions, he reckoned that his power would be absolute. For the time, however, he thought it wise to be satisfied with the one; but eventually he succeeded Hoffman as Grand Sachem, and in his dual positions gained complete control of the political situation and dictated nominations at will.

The title of "boss" he earned by his despotic action in the general committee. When a question was to be voted upon which he wished to have determined in his favor, he would neglect to call for negative votes and would decide in the affirmative, with a significantly admonishing glance at the opposing side. Soon friends and enemies alike called him "Boss" Tweed, and he did not seem to take the title harshly.

He made short shrift of his antagonists. Once, when chairman of a Tammany nominating convention, he declared the nomination of Michael Ulshoeffer, for Judge, unanimous, amid a storm of protests. On adjournment, thirty delegates remained behind to make a counter-nomination. Tweed blocked their plan by having the gas turned off.

Meanwhile he daily increased his strong personal following. Nominally Deputy Street Commissioner, to which place he was appointed in 1863, he was virtually the head of that department, and could employ, when so inclined, thousands of laborers, who could be used in manipulating ward primaries when the ward leaders showed a spirit of revolt. The Aldermen had to apply to him for jobs for their ward supporters. As a member of the Board of Supervisors at the same time, he was in a position to exercise his mandatory influence respecting the passage of resolutions dealing with expenditures and the giving out of contracts. In 1868 he added a third office to the list—that of State Senator, and was thus enabled to superintend personally the “running” of the Legislature.

The members of the “ring”—Tweed and his subordinates, Peter B. Sweeny, Richard B. Connolly and the rest—were growing rich at a rapid rate. According to the subsequent testimony of James H. Ingersoll, it was in 1867 that the understanding was reached that persons who supplied the public offices with materials would be required to increase the percentages given to the officials, and that all purveyors to the city must comply. The previous tax had been but 10 per cent., and it had been somewhat irregularly levied. A few tradesmen refused to pay the advance, but plenty there were to take their places. Ingersoll was one of these. He was told to fix his bills so as to “put up 35 per cent.,” and he obligingly complied with the command. Of the 35 per cent. collected, 25 went to Tweed and 10 to Controller Connolly.

Fourteenth Street Wigwam Built.

Tweed had become dissatisfied with the old Tammany Hall building, and a site for a new hall—the present location on Fourteenth street—was secured. The funds in hand for the building were insufficient, however, and had to be augmented by private subscription. It well illustrates the liberality with which the Tammany chieftains were supplying themselves financially, to note that when John Kelly, the Grand Sachem, at a meeting of the society announced that a loan of $250,000 would be needed, the sum of $175,000 was subscribed on the spot, fifteen members alone subscribing $10,000 each.¹ A far more astonishing incident happened in the Fall of 1867, when Peter B. Sweeny, the City Chamberlain,² announced his determination to give to the city treasury, for the benefit of the taxpayers, over $200,000 a year, interest money, which before that had been pocketed by the City Chamberlain.

While the “ring” was plundering the city and plotting theft on a more gigantic scale, the Sachems, many of them implicated in the frauds, laid the corner-stone of the new Tammany Hall building. The ceremony was marked by the characteristic pronouncement of virtuous-sounding phrases. “Brothers and friends,” rhapsodized Mayor Hoffman, “in the name of the Tammany Society, I proceed to lay the corner-stone of a new hall which will, for the next half century at least, be the headquarters of the Democracy of New York, where the great principles of civil and religious liberty, constitutional law and national unity, which form the great corner-stones of the republic, will always be advocated and maintained. * * * .” The “braves” then marched to Irving Hall, where Tweed, Sweeny and Connolly had caused such inscriptions as these to be hung about: “Civil liberty the glory of man”; “The Democratic party—Upon its union and success depends the future of the republic. He who would seek to lower its standard of patriotism and principle, or distract its councils, is an enemy to the country.” Gazing approvingly on these inscriptions from the platform sat Tweed, Sweeny and Connolly, A. Oakey Hall and a host of Judges and office-holders of all sorts, while Andrew J. Garvey (who will reappear in these chapters) conducted the invited guests. The building of this hall—an imposing one for the day—in a central part of the city, gave to the Tweed combination an advantage of no inconsiderable significance.

¹ New York Herald, September 10, 1867.

² “I heard that Peter B. Sweeny paid $60,000 for his confirmation as City Chamberlain by the Board of Aldermen”—Tweed’s testimony, Document No. 8: 105.

In the new Wigwam, on July 4, 1868, the Democratic national convention was held. Tammany, in fact, forced its candidate, Horatio Seymour, on the convention. The galleries were filled with seasoned Wigwam shouters, cheering vociferously for Seymour. Only persons having tickets were admitted, and these tickets were distributed by an able young Wigwam politician, who saw to it that only the right sort of persons gained entrance. Gaining its point on the nomination, Tammany magnanimously allowed the Southern men to dictate the declaration in the platform that the reconstruction acts were “unconstitutional, revolutionary and void.” There was a general suspicion that the organization, hopeless of the election of a Democratic President, had forced Seymour's nomination for the purpose of trading votes for its State and local ticket.

Tammany's Victory for Seymour and Hoffman.

The State convention again named Hoffman for Governor, and preparations began for a lively campaign. Tammany addressed itself to the citizenship as the defender of the interests of the poor, and instanced the candidacy of John A. Griswold for Governor, Edwin D. Morgan for Senator, and "several other millionaires," as a proof of the plutocratic tendencies of the Republican party. On October 19 the general committee, with Tweed in the chair, adopted an address urging the people to stand by Seymour and Blair. Continuing, it said:

"We are united. We believe in our cause. It is the cause of constitutional liberty, of personal rights, of a fraternity of States, of an economical government, of the financial credit of the nation, of one currency for all men, rich and poor, and of the political supremacy of the white race and protection of American labor. * * * [Hoffman] is the friend of the poor the sympathizer with the naturalized citizen, and the foe to municipal oppression in the form of odious excise and all other requisitional laws. * * * Is not the pending contest pre-eminently one of capital against labor, of money against popular rights, and of political power against the struggling interests of the masses?"

Public addresses and pronouncements, however, formed but a small part of the Tammany program for 1868. For six weeks the naturalization mills worked with the greatest regularity in the Supreme, Common Pleas and Superior Courts, producing, it was estimated, from 25,000 to 30,000 citizens, of whom not less than 85 per cent.

voted the Tammany Hall ticket. On October 30 Tweed announced to the general committee that "at 10 o'clock to-morrow the money for electioneering purposes will be distributed" and that those who came first would be served first. The chairman of the executive committee spread forth the glad tidings that there was $1,000 ready for each election district. There being 327 election districts, this made a fund of $327,000 from the general committee alone, exclusive of the sums derived in the districts themselves from the saloon-keepers and the tradesmen, whose fear of inviting reprisals by Tammany officials made them "easy marks" for assessments. Tweed personally suggested to the twenty-four leaders the stuffing of ballot boxes.¹ By fraudulent naturalization, repeating, the buying and trading of votes, and intimidation, Seymour secured a total of 108,316 votes, against 47,762 for Grant. The whole vote of the city was swelled to 156,288, of which, it was conclusively demonstrated, at least 25,000 were fraudulent.² Tweed himself confessed, nine years later, that he thought the Inspectors of Elections "lumped" the votes and declared them without counting, in order to overcome the result in the rest of the State and give the electoral vote to Seymour.³ To prevent the Republicans

¹ Document No. 8: 225.

² It was probably at this election that a certain amusing incident in the swearing in of the Election Inspectors occurred. No Bible being at hand, they were sworn on a copy of Ollendorf's "New Method of Learning to Read, Write and Speak French." The courts subsequently upheld the substitution of Ollendorf for the Bible, deciding that it was not such an act as would vitiate the election. Documents of the Board of Supervisors, 1870, II., No. 12.

³ Document No. 8: 133-34.

from getting the use of certain telegraph wires on election night, Tweed sent out long, useless messages, and it was even proposed to telegraph the whole Bible if necessary.¹

Hall Elected Mayor.

Hoffman was swept into the Governorship on the strength of the frauds. His election left vacant the Mayor's chair, and a special election to fill it was called for the first Tuesday of December.

It was all essential to the "ring" that its candidate, A. Oakey Hall, should be elected. The candidacy of Frederick A. Conkling, the Republican nominee, was not feared, but John Kelly, who controlled a considerable part of the Irish vote, was a threatening factor. Disappointed at not receiving a new post at the close of his term as Sheriff, he had led a revolt against the "ring," and had himself nominated for Mayor at the Masonic Hall "reform" convention. "Influences" were soon set at work; and suddenly, after Kelly had appeared before the nominating convention and accepted the nomination, he withdrew from the contest, on the score of ill-health.² Hall won, receiving 75,109 votes, to 20,835 for Conkling. The degree in which Tammany fraudulently increased the vote at the November election is indicated in the fact that at the December election, despite a repetition of frauds, the Tammany vote declined 33,000.

Traffic in Nominations.

The "ring" nominations, being equivalent to election, yielded a large price. There was no Democratic opposition, Mozart Hall having practically passed out of existence, through Wood's resignation of its leadership. The revenues of the various city offices were constantly rising, and a keener competition for the places arose. In 1866, before the really extensive operations of the "ring" began, it was estimated that the offices of Sheriff and County Clerk were worth $40,000 a year each. Several years later it was found that the yearly revenue of the Register amounted to between $60,000 and $70,000, partly derived from illegal fees. It was well known that one Register had received the sum of $80,000 a year.¹ The yearly aggregate of the illegal transactions in the Sheriff's office could not be accurately ascertained; but it was a well-authenticated fact that one Sheriff, about 1870, drew from the office the sum of $150,000 the first year of his term. He was a poor man when elected; upon retiring at the end of the two-years' term, he did not conceal the fact that he was worth $250,000, clear of all political assessments and other deductions.

¹ Document No. 8: 226.

² Kelly left rather hastily for Europe, where he remained three years.

Corruption of the Judiciary.

All nominations for city, county and, too often, State offices, and notoriously those for Judges, were dictated by Tweed. He not only controlled all the local departments, but swayed every court below the Court of Appeals.² Judges were nominated partly with a view to the amount they could "put up," and partly with a view to their future decisions on political questions.

¹ Report of the Bar Association committee on extortions, March 5, 1872.

² Tilden: "The Tweed Ring," J. Polhemus, 1878.

Fernando Wood had frankly presented the latter reason in his speech nominating Albert Cardozo, one of Tweed's most useful puppets, for the Supreme Court.¹ At the Judiciary election of May, 1870, repeating was the order of the day, and the registry was swelled to an enormous extent. In one of the wards, about 1,100 negroes were registered; but when they went to the ballot boxes, they were amazed to learn that white repeaters had already voted upon nearly 500 of their names. Later, when a few of the negroes tried to vote, they were arrested as repeaters. The corrupt means used in selecting the Judiciary, and the hopelessness of securing just verdicts in any of the courts, prompted one writer seriously to discuss, in the pages of a standard magazine, the formation of a vigilance committee modeled upon that of San Francisco.²

Tweed in the State Senate.

Tweed had for some time recognized the importance of gaining a seat in the State Senate. That body could at any time create or abolish city departments or offices, or change the laws affecting them. The Tammany officials, realizing its potentialities, had already made terms with it, and the "ring," which subsisted at first between the two factions of partisans in the Board of

¹ "The Ermine in the 'Ring,'" Putnam's Magazine supplement (about 1869). It happened that a singular suit brought by Wood against the city came before this very Judge, when Wood obtained by his decision a judgment for $180,000 for the rent of premises owned by him, not worth, for any use of the city, over $35,000. The buildings, in great part, were so unfit for use that the city, although paying rent for them for years, established its departments elsewhere. Wood re-leased these unused offices, collecting a double rent.

² Ibid.

Supervisors, had grown into a compact "ring" between the Republican majority at Albany, the Board of Supervisors and the Democratic officials of New York City. Tweed saw the necessity of being at the centre of political bargaining and legislative manipulation, and accordingly had himself elected to the upper house.

Upon taking his seat, in 1868, he at once began to procure legislation increasing his power in New York City. His first measure was the "Adjusted Claims" act, which gave the City Controller power to adjust claims then existing against the city, and to obtain money by the issue of bonds. Payments under this act were first made by the Controller in July, 1868, and were continued to January, 1869. During this time, 55 per cent. of the claims paid were divided among the members of the "ring." In July, 1869, payments under the act were resumed, but the percentage was increased to 60 per cent., and after November, 1869, to 65 per cent.

The conspiring contractors were led by Andrew J. Garvey, Ingersoll & Co. and Keyser & Co. At first, 25 per cent. of the spoils went to Tweed, 20 to Connolly and 10 to Sweeny. When the rate was subsequently increased, others were permitted to share in the harvest, and Watson, the County Auditor; Woodward, the clerk of the Board of Supervisors, and the recognized go-betweens for the "ring" members, received $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Five per cent. was reserved for "expenses"—in other words, the sums necessary to bribe the requisite members of the Legislature. The division of the spoils was a matter of daily occurrence when Tweed was in town, and took place in the Supervisors' room in the County Court House. After Watson's warrants had been cashed, Garvey would carry Tweed's share of the plunder to the "Boss" at the office of Street Commissioner George W. McLean. On one such visit Garvey found McLean present. In trying to hand the parcel secretly to Tweed, it fell on the floor. Tweed quickly covered it with his foot, and later, with apparent carelessness, picked it up and threw it into a drawer. The too-ingenuous Garvey was thereafter instructed to "do business" with Woodward.¹

Corruption at Albany.

Tweed soon reached a position of general control in the State Legislature. But it cost him hundreds of thousands of dollars. Often he had to pay for what he wanted quite as heavily as did the corporations who maintained lobbies there. "It was impossible to do anything there without paying for it," were his own words; "money had to be raised for the passing of bills."² A well-known lobbyist of the time stated that for a favorable report on a certain bill before the Senate $5,000 apiece was paid to four members of the committee having it in charge. On the passage of the bill a further $5,000 apiece, with contingent expenses, was to be paid. In another instance, when but one vote was needed to pass a bill, three Republicans put their figures up to $25,000 each. One of them, it is needless to say, was secured. A band of about thirty Republicans and Democrats, shortly afterwards becoming known as the "Black Horse Cavalry," organized themselves under the leadership of an energetic lobbyist, with a mutual pledge to vote as directed.¹ Naturally their action exercised a strong "bull" influence on the market for votes; and the sums paid by Tweed and other "promoters" grew to an enormous aggregate.

¹ Garvey's testimony, Tweed Case, etc., Supreme Court, 1876, I: 814-16.

² Document No. 8: 29.

Honesty among legislators was at a discount. There were some honest men in both houses who voted for several of the bills alluded to, on their merits. The lobbyists entered these men in their memoranda to their corporations as having been "fixed," put the money in their own pockets and allowed the honest members to suffer under the imputation of having been bribed. Any corporation, however extensive and comprehensive the privileges it asked, and however much oppression it sought to impose upon the people in the line of unjust grants, extortionate rates or monopoly, could convince the Legislature of the righteousness of its requests upon "producing" the proper sum.*

Operations on a Larger Scale.

In 1869 the "ring" opened operations in the Legislature and in the municipal bodies on a greater scale than ever. Tweed began to concern himself in Erie and other railroads, and to compel different corporations to give tribute for laws passed in their interest or for providing against hostile measures. He ordered the passage of the Erie Classification bill, at the suggestion of "Jim" Fisk, Jr., and Jay Gould, who for that service made him a director of the Erie railroad.* At this

¹ Document No. 8: 212-13.

² New York Sun, February 6, 1871.

* Q.—"Did you ever receive any money from either Fisk or Gould to be used in bribing the Legislature?"

A.—"I did, sir! They were of frequent occurrence. Not juncture Fisk and Gould were engaged in great stock frauds and in breeding a disastrous panic, which caused widespread ruin and suffering. Tweed abetted their schemes. One of his most servile tools, Judge George G. Barnard, of the Supreme Court, did whatever Tweed directed him, especially in favor of Gould and Fisk. One biographer of Fisk wrote quite innocently: "Jay Gould and Fisk took William M. Tweed into their [Erie] board, and the State Legislature, Tammany Hall and the Erie "Ring" were fused in interest and have contrived to serve each other faithfully."¹ Once Tweed complained that a friend "had gone back on him," and when asked in return how it was that he could stand such drains on his check-book, he laughed and showed a slip of paper on which he had calculated his Erie profits for the foregoing three months; they amounted to $650,000.

Hall Re-Elected Mayor.

During the campaign of 1869, for the election of members of the Common Council and certain State officers, a legal question arose as to whether Mayor Hall had been elected for two years or merely for the unexpired year of Hoffman's term. Hall claimed a two-years' term, and the best lawyers supported the claim. But to make sure of the matter, Tammany, in the late days of the campaign, instructed its members and followers to cast ballots for him, and the Police Commissioners distributed special ballot boxes for the Mayoralty vote. As no proclamation on the subject had been only did I receive money, but I find by an examination of the papers that everybody else who received money from the Erie Railroad charged it to me." Tweed : Document No. 8: 149.

¹ "A Life of James Fisk, Jr.," New York, 1871.

issued, the Republicans and other opponents of Tammany Hall had no opportunity to make nominations. Mayor Hall consequently received nearly the entire number of votes cast—65,568, out of a total of 66,619.

Affluence of the "Ring."

After entering the Board of Supervisors, Tweed had boasted that he would soon be among the largest real-estate owners in the city. He made good the boast. A comparatively poor man in 1864, he was reputed five years later to be worth $12,000,000. This was an exaggeration, for he was not worth anything like that sum at any one time; but he was, nevertheless, an enormously rich man. He had investments in real estate and iron mines; he was interested in every street opening and widening scheme; he had a hand in all city, and in some State, contracts, and he held directorships in many railroad and gas companies and other corporations. Connolly, who some years before had left a position as a book-keeper, at a moderate salary, to engage in politics "as a financial speculation"; Sweeny, and the rest of the "ring" suddenly became millionaires. Every active Tammany man and many Republican accomplices shared, according to the degree of each, in the sacking of the city.

CHAPTER XXIV.

TWEED IN HIS GLOBY.

1870-1871.

Urged by various motives, a number of Tammany leaders combined against Tweed. Some sought more plunder, others felt that their political aspirations had not been sufficiently recognized, and a number were incensed against Sweeny. They were led by Henry W. Genet, John Fox, John Morrissey, James O'Brien, "Mike" Norton and others, and called themselves the "Young Democracy." Tweed had used these men in building his power; now, combined, they believed they could retire him. The dangerous classes joined them. Heretofore, these had stood by Tweed under a reciprocal agreement valuable to both sides. But the "Boss" had recently yielded to the public indignation over the leniency shown to an influential murderer, and had given orders to the Judges to deal more severely with flagrant criminal cases. This act constituted a virtual breaking of the compact, and the lawbreakers with one accord turned against him. There were at this time in the city, it was charged, about 30,000 professional thieves, 2,000 gambling establishments and 3,000 saloons.¹

Young Democracy's Plan.

The plan of the Young Democracy leaders was to induce the Legislature to pass a measure known as the ¹ Statement of Rev. Dr. H. W. Billings, in Cooper Union, April 6, 1871.

Huckleberry charter, the object of which was to abolish the State commissions governing the city and to obtain a relegation of their powers to the Board of Aldermen. The disclosure was made, many years later, that Richard Croker and seven other members of the Board of Aldermen had signed an agreement before a notary public, on March 20, 1870, pledging themselves to take no official action on any proposition affecting the city government without first obtaining the consent of Senator Genet and four other Young Democracy leaders.¹ These latter boasted that they would "put the charter through" if it took $200,000 to do it. To save himself, Tweed opened a half-way understanding with the Young Democracy chiefs, by which he was to join them and abandon Sweeny. Tweed even offered—though vainly—one of the most formidable young leaders $200,000 outright if he would swerve the Young Democracy to his interest.²

The Young Democracy succeeded in winning over a majority of the general committee, and influenced that majority to call a meeting to be held in the Wigwam, on March 28. But the plotters had overlooked the society, whose Sachems, being either in, or subservient to, the "ring," now exercised the oft-used expedient of shutting out of the hall such persons as happened to be obnoxious to them. When the members of the general committee appeared before Tammany Hall, on the night of March 28, they found to their surprise that the "ring" had caused to be placed a guard of 600 policemen about the building, to prevent their ingress. The gathering convened in Irving Hall, nearby, where by roll call it was found that 187 members of the committee, later increased by about a dozen—a clear majority of the whole number—were present. Fiery speeches were made, and the set purpose of dethroning and repudiating the “ring” Sachems was emphatically declared.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, II: 1711-12.

² The man to whom this sum was offered is still in political life.

Tweed's Charter Passed.

But the Young Democracy failed to distribute among the members of the Legislature the sum promised, and the country members, by way of revenge, voted down the Huckleberry charter. Greatly encouraged by his enemies' defeat, the “Boss” went to Albany with a vast sum of money and the draft of a new charter. This charter, supplemented by a number of amendments which Tweed subsequently caused the Legislature to pass, virtually relieved the “ring” of accountability to anybody. The State commissions were abolished, and practically the whole municipal power was placed in the hands of a Board of Special Audit, composed of himself, Connolly and Mayor Hall. No money could be drawn from the city without the permission of this board. The powers of the Board of Aldermen, moreover, were virtually abolished.¹

The charter, which immediately became known as the “Tweed charter,” was passed on April 5. The victory cost every dollar of the sum Tweed took with him. Samuel J. Tilden testified that it was popularly supposed that about $1,000,000 was the amount used.¹ Tweed stated that he gave to one man $600,000 with which to buy votes, this being merely a part of the fund. For his services this lobbyist received a position requiring little or no work and worth from $10,000 to $15,000 a year.² Tweed further testified that he bought the votes of five Republican Senators for $40,000 apiece, giving one of them $200,000 in cash to distribute.³ The vote in the two houses was practically unanimous: in the Senate, 30 to 2, and in the Assembly, 116 to 5. The state of the public conscience in New York City may be judged from the fact that the charter received the support of nearly all classes, "large numbers," according to the Annual Cyclopaedia for 1871, "of the wealthiest citizens signing the petition" [for its passage].

¹ The amendments to the charter of 1857 had abolished the Board of Councilmen and reinstituted the Board of Aldermen and the Board of Assistant Aldermen, the two constituting the Common Council. The “Tweed charter” continued these two boards, legislating the then incumbents out of office, and ordering a new election in May. The “ring,” of course, secured a large majority in this new Council.

The "Boss's" Meridian of Power.

Tweed's enemies were now crushed. At the election (April 18) of the Sachems of the society the opposition could poll only a paltry 23 votes, against the 242 secured by Tweed's candidates; and even this minority was a factitious one, Tilden declaring that Tweed had arranged for it, to furnish the appearance of a contest.

Tweed's organization was wonderfully effective. The society stood ready at a moment's notice to expel from the Wigwam any person or group obnoxious to him. The general committee was now likewise subservient. In every ward he had a reliable representative—a leader, whose duty was to see that his particular district should return its expected majority. Under the leaders there were sub-leaders, ward clubs and associations, and captains of every election district. The organization covered every block in town with unceasing vigilance, acquainting itself with the politics of every voter. The moment a leader lost his popularity, or hesitated at scruples of any sort, Tweed dismissed him; only vote-getters and henchmen were wanted. So large was his personal following, that he not only caused thousands to be appointed to superfluous offices, but had a number of retainers, to whom he paid in the aggregate probably $60,000 a year, "letting them think they were being paid by the city."¹ Opposition he had no difficulty in buying off, as in the case of one "Citizens' Association," whose principal men he caused to be appointed to various lucrative positions in the city government.²

¹ The Tweed Case, etc., Supreme Court, 1876, II: 1212.

² Document No. 8: 78. ³ Ibid., 84-92.

The Registry law having been virtually repealed at Tweed's order, election frauds were made easier, and as a result of the abolition by the "Tweed charter" of the December city election, and the merging into one day's polling of national, State and city elections, the "ring" was in a position to resume the old practice of trading candidates, if all other resources failed.

Colossal Growth of Frauds.

With the passage of the "Tweed charter" and the City and County Tax Levy bill³ of 1870, the stealing expanded to a colossal degree. At a single sitting—on May 5, 1870—the Board of Special Audit made out an order for the payment of $6,312,500 on account in building the new County Court House. Of this sum barely a tenth part was realized by the city.¹ From the 65 per cent. levied on supplies, at the end of 1869, the rate was swelled to 85 per cent. "Jobs" significant of untold millions lurked in every possible form. Great projects of public improvements were exploited to the last dollar that could be drawn from them. A frequent practice of Tweed was to create on paper a fictitious institution, jot down three or four of his friends as officers, put a large amount for that institution in the tax levy and pocket the money. Asylums, hospitals and dispensaries that were never heard of, and never existed except on paper, were put down as beneficiaries of State and city. The thefts were concealed in the main by means of issues of stocks and bonds and the creation of a floating debt, which the Controller never let appear in his statements.

¹ Document No. 8: 212. ² Ibid., 223-25.

³ For the passage of this bill Tweed paid "in the neighborhood of $50,000 or $100,000." Document No. 8: 154.

Another Citizens' Movement.

A new reform movement appeared during the Summer and Fall of 1870. Republicans, independents and disaffected Democrats combined forces and nominated Thomas A. Ledwith for Mayor. The reform ticket was apparently received with great public approval, and hopes began to be entertained of its success at the polls. Tweed, however, had already secured, by ways known best to himself, assurance of Republican assistance ; he had large numbers of Republican officials, Election Inspectors, and the like, in his pay, and therefore knew that he had nothing to fear. Besides this, Tammany was united and enthusiastic. Its candidates, Hall, for Mayor, and Hoffman, for Governor, had seemingly lost none of their popularity with the rank and file. A few days before the election a popular demonstration, perhaps the largest in Tammany's history, was held in and about the Wigwam. August Belmont presided, and addresses were made by Seymour, Hoffman, Tweed and Fisk (who had now become a Democrat). All the speakers were received with boisterous enthusiasm.

¹ While this was going on Tweed maintained the most benevolent attitude in public. At the Fourth of July celebration in the Wigwam he "called the vast assemblage to order, and with coolness, but delighting (sic) modesty, welcomed brothers and guests." "Celebration at Tammany Hall of the 94th Anniversary," etc., by the Tammany Society or Columbian Order. Published by order of the Tammany Society, 1870.

Tweed won, Hall receiving 71,037 votes, to 46,392 for Ledwith. But the indications were plain that a reaction against the "ring" had begun, for Hoffman's vote exceeded that of Hall by 15,631, while Ledwith's vote exceeded that of Stewart L. Woodford, the Republican candidate for Governor, by nearly 12,000.

Tweed and the Poor.

Partly to quiet his conscience, it was suspected, and in part to make himself appear in the light of a generously impulsive man, Tweed gave, in the Winter of 1870-71, $1,000 to each of the Aldermen of the various wards to buy coal for the poor. To the needy of his native ward he gave $50,000. By these acts he succeeded in deluding the needier part of the population to the enormity of his crimes. Abstractly, these beneficiaries of his bounty knew he had not amassed his millions by honest means. But when, in the midst of a severe Winter, they were gladdened by presents of coal and provisions, they did not stop to moralize, but blessed the man who could be so good to them. Even persons beyond the range of his bounty have hailed him as a great philanthropist; and the expression, "Well, if Tweed stole, he was at least good to the poor," is still repeated, and furnishes to this day, in its tacit exoneration, the prompting for like conduct, both thieving and giving, on the part of his successors.

The Viaduct Railroad Scheme.

One of Tweed's schemes was the Viaduct Railroad bill, which virtually allowed a company created by himself to place a railroad on or above the ground, on any city street. The Legislature passed, and Governor Hoffman signed, the bill, early in 1871. One of its provisions authorized and compelled the city to take $5,000,000 of stock;¹ another exempted the company's property from taxes or assessments, while other bills allowed for the benefit of the railroad the widening and the grading of streets, which meant a "job" costing the city from $50,000,000 to $65,000,000.² Associated with Tweed and others of the "ring" as directors were some of the foremost financial and business men of the day. The complete consummation of this almost unparalleled steal was prevented only by the general exposure of Tweedism a few months later.

A Close Pinch in the Legislature.

In the Assembly of 1871 party divisions were so even that Tweed, though holding a majority of two votes, had only the exact number (65) required by the constitution as a majority. In April "Jimmy" Irving, one of the city Assemblymen, resigned, to avoid being expelled for having assaulted Smith Weed. But Tweed was equal to the occasion, for the very next day he obtained the vote and services of Orange S. Winans, a Republican creature of the Erie Railroad Company. It was charged publicly that Tweed gave Winans $75,000 in cash, and that the Erie Railroad Company gave him a five-years' tenure of office at $5,000 a year.¹

¹ Senate Journal, 1871: 482-83.

² See "A History of Public Franchises in New York City," by the author.

Subserviency of Press and Public.

Tweed neglected no means whatever to avert popular criticism. A committee composed of six of the leading and richest citizens—Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, E. D. Brown, J. J. Astor, George K. Sistar and Edward Schell—were induced to make an examination of the Controller's books, and hand in a most eulogistic report, commending Connolly for his honesty and faithfulness to duty. So highly useful a document naturally was used for all it was worth.²

But it was in his tender providence over the newspapers that his greatest success in averting public clamor was shown. Both in Albany and in this city he showered largess upon the press. One paper at the

¹ Winans was unfortunate in his bargain, for after rendering the service agreed upon, his employers failed to keep their promises. Tweed gave him only one-tenth of the sum promised, and the Erie Railroad Company gave him no office, nor, so far as can be learned, any compensation whatever.

² John Foley has stated to the author that the members of this committee were intimidated into making this report under the threat that the city officials would raise enormously the assessments on their very considerable holdings of real estate.

Capital received, through his efforts, a legislative appropriation of $207,900 for one year's printing, whereas $10,000 would have overpaid it for the service rendered.¹ The proprietor of an Albany journal which was for many years the Republican organ of the State, made it a practice to submit to Tweed's personal censorship the most violently abusive articles. On the payment of large sums, sometimes as much as $5,000, Tweed was permitted to make such alterations as he chose.² Here, in the city, the owner of one subservient newspaper received $80,000 a year for "city advertising," and to some other newspapers large subsidies were paid in the same guise. Under the head of "city contingencies," reporters for the city newspapers, Democratic and Republican, received Christmas presents of $200 each. This particular practice had begun before Tweed's time;³ but in line with the expansive manner of the "ring," the plan was elaborated by subsidizing six or eight men on nearly all the city newspapers, crediting each of them with $2,000 or $2,500 a year for "services."⁴

A Statue to Tweed Suggested.

The proprietor of the Sun, a newspaper that, from supporting the Young Democracy, veered suddenly to an enthusiastic devotion to the "Boss," proposed,

¹ Document No. 8 : 215-18.

² Ibid.

³ It was city money which the reporters frequenting the City Hall and court buildings received. The Aldermen passed in 1862 a resolution giving them (sixteen in all) $200 apiece, for "services." Mayor Opdyke vetoed the resolution, but it was passed over his veto. (Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, 1862, LXXXVIII : 708.) The grant was made yearly thereafter.

⁴ Statement of Mr. Foley.

in March, 1871, the erection of a statue to Tweed. The "Boss's" adherents jumped at the idea; and an association for the purpose was formed by Edward J. Shandley, a Police Justice, and a host of other men of local note, in professional, political and social circles, among whom were not only ardent friends of Tweed, but also those who, having opposed him, sought this opportunity of ingratiating themselves into his favor. The statue was to be "in commemoration of his [Tweed's] services to the commonwealth of New York"—so ran the circular letter.

In a few days the association had obtained nearly $8,000, some politicians giving $1,000 apiece. Other men pledged themselves to pay any amount from $1,000 to $10,000, and were on the point of making good their word when a letter from Tweed appeared, discountenancing the project. It was printed in the Sun of March 14, 1871, under the heading :

" A GREAT MAN'S MODESTY.

"THE HON. WILLIAM M. TWEED DECLINES THE SUN'S STATUE—CHARACTERISTIC LETTER FROM THE GREAT NEW YORK PHILANTHROPIST—HE THINKS THAT VIRTUE SHOULD BE ITS OWN REWARD—THE MOST REMARKABLE LETTER EVER WRITTEN BY THE NOBLE BENEFACTOR OF THE PEOPLE."

"Statues," wrote Tweed in part, "are not erected to living men, but to those who have ended their careers, and where no interest exists to question the partial tributes of friends." Tweed hinted that he was not so deficient in common sense as not to know the bad effect his toleration of the scheme would have, and, ever open to suspicion, he broadly asserted that the original statue proposition was made either as a joke or with an unfriendly motive.

One of the signers of the circular has assured the author that it was a serious proposal. The attitude of the Sun confirms this. On March 15 that newspaper stated editorially that it thought "Mr. Tweed had acted hastily," and inquired whether it was too late "to realize so worthy and so excellent an idea." In the same issue appears an interview with Justice Shandley, who says :

"We had contemplated eventually making a public proposition that the testimonial finally take the form of the establishment of a grand charitable institution, bearing Mr. Tweed's honored name, and so overcome the prejudices that the statue proposition have engendered, and passing the fame of that statesman, philanthropist and patriot down to future generations. Mr. Tweed has willed otherwise, and we must submit."

A Chicago clergyman, reading of the suggestion, publicly declared that Tweed was "more dangerous than were the ancient robber kings." Copying this expression, the Sun urged editorially on May 13:

"Now, let the friends of Mr. Tweed combine together and answer this clergyman by erecting and endowing the Tweed Hospital in the Seventh Ward of this city. A great monument of public charity is the best response that can be made to such accusations."

In the Full Glow of Splendor.

Tweed aimed at a high social place. He had removed from his modest house on Henry street to a pretentious establishment on Fifth Avenue. His daughter's wedding was among the marvels of the day; from her father's personal and political friends she received nearly $100,000 worth of gifts. Among the wedding presents were forty complete sets of silver and fifteen diamond sets, one of which was worth $45,000. Her wedding dress cost $4,000, and the trimmings were worth $1,000.

All of his expenditures showed a like disregard of cost. In the construction of the stables adjoining his Summer place at Greenwich, Conn., money "was absolutely thrown away." The stalls were built of the finest mahogany. All told, these stables were said to have cost $100,000.

The Americus Club was his favorite retreat, and there his satellites followed him. Scores of them were only too glad to pay the $1,000 initiation fee required, in addition to the $2,000 or so charged for sumptuously fitting the room to which each was entitled. The grandeur of their club badges well illustrated their extravagance. One style of the badges was a solid gold tiger's¹ head in a belt of blue enamel; the tiger's eyes were rubies, and above his head sparkled three diamonds of enormous size. Another style of badge was of solid gold with the tiger's head in papier-maché under rock crystal. It was surrounded by diamonds set in the Americus belt. Above was a pin with a huge diamond, with two smaller diamonds on either side. This badge was estimated to be worth $2,000. A third style showed the tiger's head in frosted gold, with diamond eyes.

Everywhere the prodigal dissipation of the plunder

¹ The tiger as the symbolic representation of Tammany Hall doubtless dates from this time. This animal was the emblem of the Americus Club, and in Mr. Nast's cartoons it frequently appears, with the word AMERICUS on its collar. In all probability Mr. Nast is responsible for the transference of the symbol from the club to the organization. The author has been unable to find any earlier reference to the Tammany tiger.

was visible. Sums of a few thousand dollars Tweed professed to hold in utter contempt. A city creditor once appealed to him to use his influence with Controller Connolly to have a bill paid. Twenty times he had asked for it, the creditor said, and could get it only by paying the 20 per cent. demanded. (This 20 per cent. it should be explained, was the sum extorted from all city creditors by the officials in the Controller's office as their portion after the chiefs of the "ring" had taken the lion's share.) Tweed looked at the man a moment and then wrote hastily to Connolly :

"Dear Dick : For God's sake pay ——'s bill. He tells me your people ask 20 per cent. The whole d——d thing isn't but $1,100. If you don't pay it, I will. Thine. William M. Tweed."

The "Boss's" note being virtually a command, the bill was paid in full.

CHAPTER XXV.

COLLAPSE AND DISPERSION OF THE "RING."

1871-1872.

The downfall of the "ring" was inevitable. No such stupendous series of frauds could reasonably be expected to continue, once the proper machinery for their exposure and for the awakening of the dormant public conscience was put in motion. Protests and complaints and even concerted opposition might for the time prove futile, as indeed they did; but the wind had been sown for the reaping of the whirlwind, and it could not be averted. One conspicuous instance of apparently futile criticism of the "ring" was the action of the New York City Council of Political Reform. This body, but recently organized, held a mass-meeting in Cooper Union, April 6, 1871, to consider "the alarming aspects of public affairs generally," and to agree upon means for arousing the public to some remedial action. Speeches were made by Henry Ward Beecher, Judge George C. Barrett, William F. Havemeyer, William Walter Phelps and William M. Evarts. It was pointed out that the city debt had increased from about $36,000,000 in 1868 to over $136,000,000 at the close of 1870. But amazing as were the facts, the meeting produced no direct effect.

The immediate causes of the exposure were fortuitous and accidental. In December, 1870, Watson, who had become one of the chiefs in the Finance Department, was fatally injured while sleigh-riding, and died a week later. In the resultant change, Stephen C. Lyons, Jr., succeeded Watson, and Matthew J. O'Rourke succeeded Lyons as County Book-Keeper. Mr. O'Rourke gradually came upon the evidence of the enormous robberies. In the meantime some of the evidence had also come into the possession of James O'Brien, one of the Young Democracy leaders. Controller Connolly was on the point of paying out the $5,000,000 called for by the Viaduct Railroad act, as well as other sums, but learning of O'Brien's knowledge of the situation, resolved to defer the payments. In the Summer of 1871 Mr. O'Rourke presented his evidence to the New York Times.

Revelations by the "Times."

This newspaper published the figures in detail, producing fresh disclosures day after day, and showing indisputably that the city had been plundered on a stupendous scale. In two instances alone—in the printing bills and the bills for the erection and repairing of the County Court House—the Times averred that over $10,000,000 had been illegally squandered. Tweed had bought an obscure sheet, the Transcript, and had made it the official organ for city and county advertising. He had also formed the New York Printing Company, which not only did the city printing, but claimed the custom of many persons and corporations whom he was in a position either to aid or injure. These two properties served as the highly useful media with which to extort millions from the city treasury. The Times gave the incontestible figures, disclosing that the sum of nearly $3,000,000 was squandered for county printing, stationery and advertising, during the years 1869, 1870 and 1871.

But the new County Court House, the Times demonstrated, was the chief means of directly robbing the city. All told, so far as could be learned, the sum of $3,500,000 had been spent for "repairs" in thirty-one months—enough, the Times said, to have built and furnished five new buildings such as the County Court House. Merely the furnishing, repairing and decorating of this building, it was shown, cost $7,000,000. One firm alone—Ingersoll & Co.—received, in two years, the gigantic sum of $5,600,000 "for supplying the County Court House with furniture and carpets." In brief, the County Court House, it was set forth specifically, instead of costing between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000, as the "ring" all along had led the public to believe, had actually cost over $12,000,000, the bulk of which was stolen.

Indifference of the "Ring."

The members of the "ring" affected an air of unconcern regarding the disclosures. When Tweed was questioned as to the charges, he made his famous reply: "What are you going to do about it?" He professed not to care for newspaper attacks. Yet Thomas Nast's terribly effective cartoons pierced him to the heart. "If those picture papers would only leave me alone," he lamented, "I wouldn't care for all the rest. The people get used to seeing me in stripes, and by and by grow to think I ought to be in prison." Mayor Hall put on an air of jocose indifference, occasionally replying to the charges by references to the alleged frauds in the Federal Government,¹ but oftener by wondrously facetious jests such as: "Counts at Newport are at a discount;" "shocking levity—the light-ship off Savannah has gone astray;" "these warm, yet occasionally breezy days, with charmingly cool mornings and evenings, are an indication that we are likely to have what befell Adam—an early Fall." *

Committee of Seventy Formed.

The public, however, was at last aroused, and the impudent flippancy of Tweed, Hall and others only added to the public indignation. Though the Times was but imperfectly armed with proofs, each day's revelations brought the citizens to a keener realization of the unprecedented enormity of the thefts, and the resolve was made by leading members of both parties in the city to unite and crush the "ring." A call for a mass-meeting, to be held in Cooper Union, September 4, was met by a tremendous outpouring of citizens. William F. Havemeyer, the former Mayor, presided, and 227 vice-presidents and 15 secretaries were chosen from among the foremost names in the community. Among the speakers were Robert B. Roosevelt and Judge Edwards Pierrepont. Now, for the first time, the public obtained a really definite idea of the magnitude of the sum stolen by the "ring" and its followers. Resolutions were reported by Joseph H. Choate, stating that the acknowledged funded and bonded debt of the city and county was upward of $113,000,000—over $63,000,000 more than it was when Mayor Hall took office

¹ New York Times, August 29, 1871.

* Ibid., August 30, 1871.

—and that there was reason to believe that there were floating, contingent or pretended debts and claims against the city and county which would amount to many more millions of dollars, and which would be paid out of the city treasury unless the fiscal officers were removed and their proceedings arrested. The resolutions concluded by directing the appointment of an Executive Committee of Seventy, to overthrow the “ring,” abolish abuses, secure better laws, and by united effort, without reference to party, obtain a good government and honest officers to administer it.

Burning of the Controller's Vouchers.

The first move decided upon by the Committee of Seventy was to make a thorough examination of the city's accounts. A sub-committee was on the point of doing this when, on the morning of September 11, it was reported that the Controller's office, in the City Hall, had been broken into on the previous night and the vouchers, more than 3,500 in all, stolen. The “ring” confederates pretended that the vouchers had been abstracted from a glass case—an absurd explanation considering that after spending $400,000 for safes the city officials should have chosen such a flimsy receptacle. Later, the charred remains of these vouchers were discovered in an ash-heap in the City Hall attic.

As if to yield to public opinion, Mayor Hall at once asked Connolly to resign as Controller. Connolly refused, on the ground that such a step without impeachment and conviction on trial would be equal to a confession of guilt. Secretly, however, fearing that the other members of the “ring” intended to make a scapegoat of him, he was disposed to make terms with the Committee of Seventy to save himself. Upon the advice of Havemeyer, he appointed Andrew H. Green, Deputy Controller. With Mr. Green in that post, the Committee of Seventy could expect a tangible computation of the "ring's" thefts. Alive to their danger, the other members of the "ring" in terror tried to force Connolly to resign, so as to end the powers he had delegated to the new Deputy Controller. Mayor Hall insisted that in making Mr. Green Acting Controller, Connolly's action was equivalent to a resignation, and with much bluster said he would treat it as such.

Sub-Committee's Report.

In October the sub-committee made a hasty examination of such of the city accounts as were available, and were enabled to report that the debt of the city was doubling every two years; that $3,200,000 had been paid for repairs on armories and drill rooms, the actual cost of which was less than $250,000; that over $11,000,000 had been charged for outlays on the unfinished County Court House,¹ the entire cost of building which, on an honest estimate, would be less than $3,000,000; that safes, carpets, furniture, cabinet-work, painting, plumbing, gas and plastering, had cost $7,289,466, the real value of which was found to be only $624,180; that $460,000 had been paid for $48,000 worth of lumber; that the printing, advertising, stationery, etc., of the city and county had cost in two years and eight months, $7,168,212; that a large number of persons were on the ¹ Later estimates put the expenditures on the Court House at $13,000,000. The generally accepted figures were over $12,000,000.

payrolls of the city, whose services were neither rendered nor needed; and that figures upon warrants and vouchers had been altered fraudulently and payments made repeatedly on forged endorsements.

Hall and Tweed Indicted.

These figures, though presenting nothing more than an outline of the immensity of corruption, gave the Committee of Seventy a foundation upon which to proceed legally. It at once obtained an injunction from Judge Barnard, restraining for the time the payment of all moneys out of the city treasury.¹ The order was modified subsequently to permit the necessary payments. The city treasury had been sacked so completely that it was found necessary to borrow nearly a million dollars from the banks to satisfy the more pressing claims.

The Committee of Seventy next presented Mayor Hall before the Grand Jury for indictment. Anticipating this, the "ring" had "packed" the Grand Jury; but such was the public outcry on this fact becoming known, that Judge Barnard was forced to dismiss the jury and order a new panel. The second jury, however, did not indict the Mayor, giving, as a reason, the lack of conclusive evidence. Later, Hall was tried, but the jury disagreed. The Committee of Seventy next procured the appointment of Charles O'Connor as assistant to the Attorney-General, and then engaged, as O'Connor's assistants, William M. Evarts, Wheeler H. Peckham and Judge Emmott, with the express view of driving the "ring" men into prison. Through their energy, Tweed was arrested, on the affidavit of Samuel J. Tilden, on October 26, and held to bail in the sum of $1,000,000.

¹ It was John Foley who procured the injunction. Mr. Foley has informed the author that upon the original injunction being obtained, the "ring" made a great clamor about the thousands of laborers who would be deprived of their wages, and ordered their hired newspaper writers so to incite the workingmen that the chief movers against the "ring" would be mobbed. In fact, were it not for public protection, grudgingly given on demand, it is doubtful whether some of the opponents of the "ring" would have survived the excitement.

Appeal to the Voters.

But Tweed was not yet crushed. In a few days—on November 7—an election for members of the Legislature, State officers, Judges of the Supreme Court, and Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, was to be held. Most of the "ring" men, in the very face of the revelations of their stupendous thefts, forgery, bribing and election frauds, came forward as candidates for renomination and election. Once elected, they reckoned upon their "vindication." The Committee of Seventy naturally aimed at the defeat of the Tammany candidates, both for political and for moral effect, and placed candidates in the field for all local, legislative and judicial offices.

As Grand Sachem and chairman of the Tammany General Committee, Tweed was still "boss." He arranged to win by his oft-used weapons of bribery and intimidation, if not by violence. The two Republican Police Commissioners were his hirelings, owing their offices to him. They could be depended upon to aid their Tammany colleagues into making the police a power for his benefit. How well, otherwise, the "ring" was fortified, was shown when the *Times*¹ charged that sixty-nine members of the Republican General

¹ August 19, 1871.

Committee, which assumed to direct the counsels of the Republican party in the city, were stipendiaries of Tweed and Sweeny. One of them was quoted as saying, "I go up to headquarters the first of every month and get a hundred dollars, but I don't hold no office and don't do no work."

Tammany feigned to regard Tweed as a great benefactor being hounded. Tweed carried out the comedy to his best. On September 22 a "great Tweed mass-meeting" assembled in "Tweed Plaza." Resolutions were vociferously adopted, that,

"pleased with his past record and having faith in his future, recognizing his ability and proud of his leadership, believing in his integrity and outraged by the assaults upon it, knowing of his steadfastness and commending his courage, admiring his magnanimity and grateful for his philanthropy, the Democracy of the Fourth Senatorial District of the State of New York, constituents of the Hon. William M. Tweed, in mass-meeting assembled, place him in nomination for re-election, and pledge him their earnest, untiring and enthusiastic support."¹

Despite the public agitation over the frauds, the Tammany nominations were of the worst possible character. Nominees for the State Senate included such "ring" men as Genet, "Mike" Norton, John J. Bradley and Walton; and for the Assembly, "Jim" Hayes, an unscrupulous tool; "Tom" Fields, reputed to be probably the most corrupt man that ever sat in the Legislature; Alexander Frear, who for years had engineered "ring" bills; and "Jimmy" Irving, who had been forced to resign his seat in the Assembly the previous Winter to avoid being expelled for a personal assault on a fellow-member. The innumerable Tammany ward clubs, all bent on securing a share of the "swag," paraded and bellowed for these characters.

¹ New York Times, November 2, 1871.

The Seventy Victorious.

The election proved that the people had really awakened. The victory of the Committee of Seventy was sweeping. Of the Anti-Tammany candidates, all of the Judges, four of the five Senators, 15 of the 21 Assemblymen, and all but two of the Aldermen were elected, and a majority of the Assistant Aldermen had given pledges for reforms.

The one Tammany candidate for Senator elected was the "Boss" himself, and he won by over 9,000 majority. The frauds in his district were represented by careful observers as enormous. In many precincts it was unsafe to vote against him. Opposing voters were beaten and driven away from the polls, the police helping in the assaults. The re-election of Tweed, good citizens thought, was the crowning disgrace, and measures were soon taken which effectually prevented him from taking his seat.

End of the "Ring."

On November 20 Connolly resigned as Controller, and Andrew H. Green was appointed in his place. On November 25 Connolly was arrested and held in $1,000,000 bail. Unable to furnish it, he was committed to jail. On December 16 Tweed was indicted for felony. While being taken to the toms he was snatched away on a writ of habeas corpus and haled before Judge Barnard, who released him on the paltry bail of $5,000.

A fortnight later, forced by public opinion, Tweed resigned as Commissioner of Public Works, thus giving up his last hold on power.

The careers of the "ring" men after 1871 form a striking contrast to their former splendor. Tweed ceased to be Grand Sachem. Almost every man's hand seemed raised against him. The newspapers which had profited most by his thefts grew rabid in denouncing him and his followers, and urged the fullest punishment for them.

He was tried on January 30, 1873. The jury disagreed. During the next Summer he fled to California. Voluntarily returning to New York City, against the advice of his friends, he was tried a second time, on criminal indictments, on November 19. Found guilty on three-fourths of the 120 counts, Judge Noah Davis sentenced him to twelve years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $12,000. Upon being taken to Blackwell's Island, the Warden of the Penitentiary asked him the usual questions: "What occupation?" "Statesman!" he replied. "What religion?" "None."

After one year's imprisonment, Tweed was released by a decision of the Court of Appeals, on January 15, 1875, on the ground that owing to a legal technicality the one year was all he was required to serve. Anticipating this decision, Tilden and his associates had secured the passage of an act by the Legislature, expressly authorizing the People to institute a civil suit such as they could not otherwise maintain. New civil suits were then brought against Tweed, and as soon as he was discharged from the Penitentiary he was rearrested and held in $3,000,000 bail.

Escape and Recapture.

This bail he could not get, and he lay in prison until December 4, when, while visiting his home, in the custody of two keepers, he escaped. For two days he hid in New Jersey, and later was taken to a farmhouse near the Palisades. He disguised himself by shaving his beard and clipping his hair, and wearing a wig and gold spectacles. Fleeing again, he spent a while in a fisherman's hut near the Narrows, visiting Brooklyn and assuming the name of "John Secor." Leaving on a schooner, he landed on the coast of Florida, whence he went to Cuba in a fishing smack, landing near Santiago de Cuba. The fallen "Boss" and a companion were at once arrested as suspicious characters—the Ten Years' War being then in progress—and Tweed was recognized. He, however, smuggled himself on board the Spanish bark "Carmen," which conveyed him to Vigo, Spain. Upon the request of Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State, he was arrested, turned over to the commander of the United States man-of-war "Franklin," which brought him back to New York on November 23, 1876.

In one of the civil suits judgment had been given against him for over $6,000,000. Confessing to this, he was put in jail, to be kept there until he satisfied it, a requirement he said he was unable to meet. The city found no personal property upon which to levy. Tweed testified in 1877 that he held about $2,500,000 worth of real estate in 1871, and that at no time in his life was he worth more than from that amount to $3,000,000.¹ He had recklessly parted with a great deal of his money, he stated. He testified also to having lost $600,000 in two years in fitting up the Metropolitan Hotel for one of his sons,¹ and to having paid his lawyers $400,000 between 1872 and 1875. His escape from Ludlow Street Jail had cost him $60,000. It is reasonably certain that he had been blackmailed on all sides, and besides this, as has already been shown, he had been compelled to disgorge a vast share of the plunder to members of the Legislature and others. When his troubles began he transferred his real estate—and, it is supposed, his money—to his son, Richard M. Tweed.

¹ Document No. 8: 806.

Tweed Dies in Prison.

In Ludlow Street Jail he occupied the Warden's parlor, at a cost of $75 a week. As he lay dying, on April 12, 1878, he said to the matron's daughter: "Mary, I have tried to do good to everybody, and if I have not, it is not my fault. I am ready to die, and I know God will receive me." To his physician, Dr. Carnochan, he said: "Doctor, I've tried to do some good, if I haven't had good luck. I am not afraid to die. I believe the guardian angels will protect me." The matron said he never missed reading his Bible. According to S. Foster Dewey, his private secretary, Tweed's last words were: "I have tried to right some great wrongs. I have been forbearing with those who did not deserve it. I forgive all those who have ever done evil to me, and I want all those whom I have harmed to forgive me." Then throwing out his hand to catch that of Luke, his black attendant, he breathed his last.

Only eight carriages followed the plain hearse carrying his remains, and the cortège attracted no attention. "If Tweed had died in 1870," said the cynical Coroner Woltman, one of his former partisans, "Broadway would have been festooned with black, and every military and civic organization in the city would have followed him to Greenwood."

¹ Document No. 8: 372.

Fate of the Other Conspirators.

Sweeny settled with the prosecutor for a few hundred thousand dollars and found a haven in Paris, until years later he reappeared in New York. He is still living. The case of the People against him was settled—as the Aldermanic committee appointed in 1877 to investigate the "ring" frauds reported to the Common Council—"in a very curious and somewhat incomprehensible way."¹ The suits were discontinued on Sweeny agreeing to pay the city the sum of $400,000 "from the estate of his deceased brother, James M. Sweeny." What the motive was in adopting this form the committee did not know. The committee styled Sweeny "the most despicable and dangerous [of the "ring"] because the best educated and most cunning of the entire gang."²

Connolly fled abroad with $6,000,000, and died there. Various lesser officials also fled, while a few contractors and officials who remained were tried and sent to prison, chiefly upon the testimony of Garvey, who turned State's evidence, and then went to London. Under the name of "A. Jeffries Garvie," he lived there until his death in 1897.

Of the three Judges most involved—Barnard, Cardozo

¹ Document No. 8: 29.

² Ibid.: 30.

and McCunn¹—the first and the last were impeached, while Cardozo resigned in time to save himself from impeachment.

Amount and Disposition of the Plunder.

The question remains: How much did the "ring" steal? Henry F. Taintor, the auditor employed in the Finance Department by Andrew H. Green to investigate the controller's books, testified before the special Aldermanic committee, in 1877, that he had estimated the frauds to which the city and county of New York had been subjected, during the three and a half years from 1868 to 1871, at from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000.² The special Aldermanic committee, however, evidently thought the thefts amounted to $60,000,000; for it asked Tweed whether they did not approximate that sum, upon which he gave no definite reply. But Mr. Taintor's estimate, as he himself admitted, was far from complete, even for the three and a half years. It is the generally accepted opinion among those who have had the best opportunity for knowing, that the sums distributed among the "ring" and its allies and dependents amounted to over $100,000,000. Matthew J. O'Rourke, who, since his disclosures, has made a further remarkable study of this period, has informed the author that, from 1869 to 1871, the "ring" stole about $75,000,000, and that he thought the total stealings from about 1865 to 1871, counting vast issues of fraudulent bonds, amounted to $200,000,000. Of the entire sum stolen from the city only $876,000 was recovered.

¹ Barnard and Cardozo were both Sachems. Mr. Foley is the author's authority for the statement that when Barnard died, $1,000,000 in bonds and cash was found among his effects.

² Document No. 8.

The next question is : Where did all this money go ? We have referred to the share that remained to Tweed and Connolly, but the other members of the great "ring" and its subordinate "rings" kept their loot, a few of them returning to the city a small part by way of restitution. When Garvey died in London, his estate was valued at $600,000. There are many living persons, some of them bearing names of the highest "respectability," who, directly or indirectly, profited by the Tweed frauds, and whose present fortunes are based on their participation in those gigantic swindles.

CHAPTER XXVI.

TAMMANY RISES FROM THE ASHES.

1872-1874.

After the disclosures of 1871, the name of Tammany Hall became a by-word throughout the civilized world, and the enemies of corruption assured themselves that the organization was shorn of political power for a long time to come. But the wonderful instinct of self-preservation which had always characterized Tammany, joined with the remarkable sagacity which its chiefs almost invariably displayed in critical times, now conspired to keep the organization alive despite every antagonistic influence. The Tammany Society still had its charter, and while that charter remained intact, Tammany retained strong potentialities for regaining power. The reformers neglected to ask for its annulment—though it is doubtful if they could have obtained it, since the Governor, John T. Hoffman, was a creation of the Tammany organization.

The urgent need of the Wigwam was a leader. In response to the demand, two men, John Kelly and John Morrissey, stepped to the front. Both of them were the product of local politics, and having made a science of their experience, they knew that the Tammany Hall that now lay prostrate and reviled could be raised and again made a political factor, and eventually the ruler of the city. The few men of fair character in the organization were undesirous of appearing too prominently in its councils ; but despite the general odium attached to it, Kelly and Morrissey found that a large part of the thoughtless mass of the Democratic voters were still willing to follow its leadership.

Rise of John Kelly.

Kelly had been in Europe from 1868 to late in 1871, and had not been directly implicated in the Tweed frauds. He had a strong personality, and was popular among the largest and most energetic part of the voting population—the Irish. He was called “Honest John Kelly,” and he took care to strengthen the belief implied in that name, surrounding himself at all times with a glamour of political probity. Born April 20, 1822, in New York City, of poor parents, his early life was divided between hard work and fighting, though he never appeared in the prize-ring. His trade was that of a grate-setter and mason. His early education was defective, but he later improved his natural talents by study at the parochial and evening schools.

The district in which he lived was the roughest in the city. Being a man of aggressive ways and popular enough to control the turbulent elements, the politicians in 1853 had him elected an Alderman, a post which he retained during 1854 and 1855. In this body he was known as a “bench-warmer”—that is, a member who kept his seat and followed the orders of his political masters without question. Giving satisfaction, he was selected to run for Congress in the district then represented by “Mike” Walsh—who was regarded in Washington as the leader of the rowdy element of New York City. Walsh ran independently, but Kelly beat him by 18 votes in a total vote of 7,593. It was generally charged then and long after that Kelly was "counted in." Later he was re-elected. During his terms in Congress, Kelly controlled most of the Federal patronage in New York City, and it was through his influence especially that Isaac V. Fowler—who, as we have mentioned, was afterward found to have embezzled over $155,000 from the Government—was reappointed Postmaster by Buchanan.

In 1863 Kelly, disgruntled at not being appointed a Police Commissioner, led a portion of the Irish vote from the Wigwam over to the Germans, helping in the election of Gunther as Mayor. Having proved his influence, Tweed, in order to gain him over, gave him the nomination for Sheriff, to which office he was elected. His nomination for Mayor and his sudden withdrawal we have already related.

At the time of his flight to Europe he was a rich man. Mayor Havemeyer charged, in 1874, as we shall see, that some, at least, of Kelly's wealth was obtained by anything but proper methods.

This was the successor of Tweed as the "boss" of Tammany Hall. His coadjutor for a time, John Morrissey, was a professional prize-fighter and gambler, whose boast was that he "had never fought foul nor turned a card."¹ When these men assumed control of the Wigwam, few persons believed it could outlive the "ring" revelations and regain power.

¹ In Tweed's confession (1877) Morrissey is mentioned as having introduced a system of repeating from Philadelphia, and also as having acted as paymaster of the fund of $65,000 distributed among the Aldermen to secure the confirmation of Sweeny as Chamberlain.

Reformers Chosen Sachems.

Then occurred an extraordinary happening, though quite in keeping with Tammany shrewdness. At the society's annual election, in April, 1872, Kelly and Augustus Schell (who had been elected Grand Sachem after Tweed was forced to resign) caused to be selected as Sachems some of the identical men who had been most conspicuous in the reform movement, such as Samuel J. Tilden, Charles O'Connor, Horatio Seymour, Sanford E. Church and August Belmont. The best proof that the non-partisan movement of 1871 was already dissolving was the readiness with which these men accepted these elections. Their acceptance may have been due to a mixed desire to make of the organization a real reform body as well as to advance their political fortunes.

The Tammany Society now stood before the public as a reform body, with the boast that all the thieves had been cast out. Next it appointed a reorganization committee to reconstruct the Tammany Hall political organization. Under its direction the general committee was enlarged to nearly five hundred members, and a new general committee, of unquestionably better quality than its predecessor, was elected. In the case of disputing district delegations, the Tammany Society's committee decided by selecting the best men for both.¹ Out of chaos, within a few months of the "ring's" overthrow, Kelly created a strong organization, so deftly composed as to place itself before the people as an entirely distinct set of men from the "ring" thieves—as a really Democratic body, quite as heartily in favor of good government as the most exacting reformer.

¹ The reorganization committee reached the understanding that the society should thereafter keep in the background and that it should not prominently interfere in the organization's affairs.

Kelly acted with great shrewdness, executive force, knowledge of men, and apparent regard for the public interests and proprieties. He affected extreme modesty, and made it appear that the delegates chose nominees by their own uninfluenced will. At the Judiciary convention in Tammany Hall, in October, 1872, he insisted that each delegate vote; in his speech he said that Tammany should have no more of the times when tickets were made up outside of conventions. Some delegates shouting for the nomination of a man of dubious character, he declared, with the air of a man exerting himself for the good of his party only, that it was time that Tammany Hall should put such a ticket in the field that no man could hold up the finger of scorn at any individual on it. He furthermore caused the appointment of a committee to co-operate in the work of reform with the Bar Association, the Committee of Seventy, the Municipal Taxpayers' Association and the Liberal Republicans.

Havemeyer Elected Mayor.

At Kelly's suggestion the Wigwam, in the Fall of 1872, nominated for Mayor, Abraham R. Lawrence, a member of the Committee of Seventy and its counsel, and for Judges of the Supreme and Superior Courts, men of ability and unimpeachable name. Altogether, Tammany took on such a new guise that thousands of voters returned to its support. But the Anti-Tammany movement had not yet dissipated its strength, even though it presented a divided front. One wing of this opposition was the new "reform" organization, the "Apollo Hall Democracy," founded by James O'Brien, who now stood forth as its candidate for Mayor. The other wing, composed of the individuals and associations centering about the Committee of Seventy, nominated William F. Havemeyer.

Tammany had the advantage of a Presidential year, when the obligation of "regularity" could be imposed upon a goodly share of the Democratic voters, and the further advantage of a high order of personal character in its nominees. Nevertheless, Havemeyer won, the vote standing approximately: Havemeyer, 53,806; Lawrence, 45,398; O'Brien, 31,121. The results from several election districts were missing and were never canvassed by the Board of Canvassers. For Horace Greeley, the Democratic Presidential candidate, Tammany Hall carried the city by 23,000 majority.

Havemeyer's Good Record.

Mayor Havemeyer's administration differed greatly from most of the "reform" administrations that had preceded it. Never since the year 1800 had the city revenue been distributed with such great care. The utmost regard was paid to the ordinances dealing with public health and security, and the streets were kept cleaner than ever before. The rowdy and criminal classes were deprived of the free sway they had so long enjoyed. The public school system was improved, and the standard of official character was of a higher type than had been known in many a decade. The city expenditures in 1873 were about $32,000,000, as compared with $36,262,589.41 in 1871, and notwithstanding the tremendous legacy of debt left by the Tweed "ring" to be shouldered by later administrations, Mayor Havemeyer's administration reduced the city expenses about $8,000,000 in reality, though the bare figures on their face did not show that result.

Mayor Havemeyer complained, as so many of his predecessors had done, of the perverse interference of the Legislature in city affairs—an interference which constantly embarrassed his plans and set back the cause of reform.

The Mayor was not destined to serve his full term. In September, 1874, a bitter quarrel sprang up between him on the one hand and John Kelly and John Morrissey on the other, apparently over the appointment, at Kelly's request, of Richard Croker to be a Marshal. "When Croker's appointment was announced," wrote the Mayor, "I was overwhelmed with a torrent of indignation." In a public letter addressed to Kelly, Mayor Havemeyer charged that the former, while Sheriff, had obtained $84,482 by fraudulent and illegal receipts, adding this further characterization :

"I think that you were worse than Tweed, except that he was a larger operator. The public knew that Tweed was a bold, reckless man, making no pretensions to purity. You, on the contrary, were always avowing your honesty and wrapped yourself in the mantle of piety. Men who go about with the prefix of 'honest' to their names are often rogues."

Kelly replied that he had acted in the Sheriff's office as had his predecessors, and brought a libel suit against the Mayor, in the answer to which the latter embodied his charges in full. But on the day the suit was to come to trial Havemeyer fell dead of apoplexy in his office.

The Wigwam Again Victorious.

During the two years (1872-74) various forces combined to restore Tammany to the old power. The two great parties were struggling for partisan advantage for future State and national elections. This brought about the old party alignment, the reform Democrats, as a rule, acting with the Wigwam, and the reform Republicans drifting to the Republican side. The disreputable classes issued forth in greater force than ever to help replace in power the Tammany that meant to them free sway. The panic of 1873, with the consequent "hard times," turned great bodies of voters against the dominant party. The "ring" had so thoroughly looted the city that Havemeyer's administration was forced to practice economy in the public works. The working classes either did not understand the motive of this retrenchment, or did not appreciate it. Out of the 24,500 mechanics in the city during the Winter of 1873-74, 15,000, it was estimated, were unemployed. Tammany now adroitly declared itself in favor of giving public employment to the workers. The Wigwam agents scoured the poorer districts during the campaign of 1874, giving aid to the needy, and gained their support. The agitation against a third term for President Grant; the demand for a low tariff and the denunciation of the Washington "ring," all had their effect, while the impression which naturally might have been expected from Havemeyer's charges against Kelly was entirely lost by the former's slurring allusions to Kelly's humble birth and early occupation—allusions which threw the sympathy and support of the masses strongly to Kelly and his ticket.

The astonishing consequence was that in November, 1874, Tammany Hall which, in 1871, seemed buried beneath obloquy, elected its candidate for Mayor, William H. Wickham (a diamond merchant and an anti-“ring” Democrat and a member of the Committee of Seventy) by nearly 9,000 majority over all, his vote being 70,071, against 24,226 for Oswald Otten-dorfer, the Independent Democratic candidate, and 36,953 for Salem H. Wales, the Republican. At the same election, Tilden, who had also contributed to the downfall of the “ring,” received the solid support of Tammany, and was elected to the Governorship.

Back to Its Old Self.

Tammany Hall under the surface was rapidly becoming its old self. Its candidate for Register, “Jim” Hayes, had made, it was charged, $500,000 during the Tweed regime. Fully three-fourths of the office-seekers in this election were connected with the liquor interests; and as many of these were keepers of low grogeries, they were in constant conflict with the law. Nine of the fifteen Tammany candidates for Aldermen were former creatures or beneficiaries of the “ring,” one of them being under two indictments for fraud. Yet the partisan currents at work again swept almost all of them into office.

Well realizing the value of appearances, Kelly lectured the new members of the Common Council,¹ telling them that "there must be no bad measures, no 'rings,' no getting together of a few men for the purpose of making money and controlling patronage." Yet Kelly himself at this time absolutely controlled the strongest and probably the most corrupt political organization in the Union. He dictated State, Judicial, Congressional, Legislative and municipal nominations at will, and continued to be the absolute "boss" until his death in 1886.

¹ Amendments to the charter, passed in 1873, vested local powers in a Board of Aldermen and a Board of Assistant Aldermen—the latter to be abolished on and after January 1, 1875, and the Board of Aldermen to form thenceforth the Common Council. The Common Council was not to pass any measure over the Mayor's veto without the vote of two-thirds of all its members. A part of the former Aldermanic powers was restored to this board by the amendments of 1878 and later years.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF JOHN KELLY.

1874-1886.

The history of the Tammany Society and of Tammany Hall during the period from 1874 to the present time embraces a vast and intricate web of influences, activities and consequences. To present this period in the detail proportionate to that employed in the preceding chapters would require an amount of space inconsistent with the projected volume of this work. It will, therefore, be presented in the manner of a COMPREHENSIVE SUMMARY, in which the main movement will be outlined, and particular treatment given only to the more important features and events.

Kelly's Rule Supreme.

Toward the end of 1874 Kelly's rule had become supreme. Under the form of "requests" he assessed every office-holder, even calling upon men receiving only $1,000 a year to pay as much as $250. To systematize these assessments, he established a regular collect- orship, in charge of the society's Wiskinskie, a city employee drawing $1,500 a year for apparent services. Abundant charges, some of which were proved, were made as to corruption in many of the city departments.

During the next year (1875) a number of disaffected Wigwam men formed the "Irving Hall Democracy" and issued an address denouncing the Tammany General Committee as the creature of the society. The effect of this defection and of the charges of public corruption was such that in the local elections Tammany lost many of the minor offices.

The friendship between Kelly and Tilden had already been broken. Kelly organized a bitter opposition to Tilden at the St. Louis national convention, in 1876, but pledged himself to support the nominations, and kept his word.

The Presidential campaign of this year held the municipal struggle within strict party lines. The various Democratic factions united on Smith Ely, electing him Mayor by a majority of 53,517 over John A. Dix, the Republican candidate.

From December, 1876, to December, 1880, Kelly filled the position of City Controller, and was credited with reducing the city debt. Politics, however, rather than fiscal administration for the benefit of the city, continued to be his main business. One of the numerous examples of his superior sagacity in bowing to the general public sentiment was his support, in 1878, of Edward Cooper, an Anti-Tammany nominee for Mayor, a man of recognized independence of character, who was elected. Tammany at this time was still largely influenced by the old Tweed conspirators, the assertion being made in 1877 that at least fifty former officeholders under Tweed were to be found in the general committee.¹

Kelly Bolts the State Ticket.

In 1879 occurred the well-known fight of Tammany against the Democrats of the rest of the State. The Democratic State convention had assembled at Syracuse. The roll-call had barely begun when Augustus Schell, spokesman for the Tammany organization, stated that as there was every prospect that Gov. Lucius Robinson would be renominated, the delegates from New York City would withdraw, although they stood ready to support any other name. This "suggestion," as Schell afterwards called it, was unheeded, whereupon the entire Tammany delegation retired. The delegation meeting elsewhere, Kelly, with the specific object of defeating Robinson, caused himself to be nominated for Governor. The quarrel between Robinson and the Tammany chief was personal, arising from the fact that the Governor had removed Henry A. Gumbleton, a prominent Wigwam man, from the office of County Clerk. Such was the discipline to which Kelly had reduced the organization that it obeyed his word without a single protest.

¹ Document No. 8: 102.

He succeeded in his ulterior object. His 77,566 votes caused the defeat of Robinson, who received 375,790 votes, to 418,567 for Alonzo B. Cornell, the Republican candidate. The significant lesson furnished by Kelly's making good his threat, was one generally heeded thereafter by State and national politicians and candidates, who declined to invite the hostility of so great a power. But for this secession, and the consequent demoralization of the Democratic party in the State, New York's electoral vote, it is generally thought, would have gone to Gen. Hancock in 1880. Mayor Cooper refused to reappoint Kelly to the office of Controller at the expiration of his term, in December, 1880, because of his supposed agency in the defeat of Hancock.

Grace Elected Mayor.

In 1880 the Democrats of the city were divided into the factions of Tammany Hall and Irving Hall, but laying aside differences till after the election, they agreed upon an apportionment of the local offices. The Democratic candidate for Mayor, William R. Grace, was selected by the Tammany committee from a list of names submitted by Irving Hall. Many of the members of the latter organization, however, were prejudiced against Mr. Grace because of his Roman Catholic faith, fearing that in case of his election the public school appropriations would be diverted to sectarian uses. They joined with the Republicans in support of William Dowd. The vote stood : Grace, 101,760; Dowd, 98,715.

Mayor Grace's official power was considerably limited by the action of the Legislature, which had made the tenure of office of executives of departments longer than his own—a law which in effect put the department heads in a position independent of the Mayor. In frequent messages, Mayor Grace expressed himself, as had Mayor Havemeyer, pointedly, though vainly, on the evils of legislative interference with the local government.

County Democracy Organized.

In December, 1880, a new organization, called the "New York County Democracy," was formed by Abram S. Hewitt and others, to oppose both Tammany Hall and Irving Hall. This body soon had a large enrolled membership, and was joined later by a number of Democrats who had unsuccessfully attempted to bring about reform in Tammany. To that end they had made an effort, at the society's annual election in April, 1881, to elect their candidates for Sachems, when the ticket headed by Kelly won by an average majority of 50 in about 775 votes. The fact, or belief, that the result was secured through repeating and other unfair means, caused a considerable defection from Tammany.

Tammany "Irregular."

In the State convention of October, 1881, the Tammany delegation was ruled out, and the County Democracy was declared "regular." At an earlier period this adverse decision might have entailed serious, if not fatal, consequences to the Wigwam. But now that the organization was in a state of absolute discipline, ruled by one hard-headed, tireless "boss," with each member understanding that his self-interest required his "standing by" the organization in times of trouble, as well as in times of triumph, the blow had no lasting effect.

Holding the balance of power in the Legislature of 1882, the Tammany members resolved to force the "regular" Democracy to make terms with them. To that end they attended no party caucuses, and refused to support men nominated by the "regular" Democrats. At Kelly's order they demanded, as the price of their co-operation, certain chairmanships of important committees. Not getting them, they continued for weeks their stubborn opposition. Finally the two houses were organized, the Tammany men voting for the Republican candidate for clerk. Charges were freely made of a political bargain between Kelly and Gov. Cornell.

Three Democratic Factions.

There were three Democratic factions in the city in 1882—Tammany Hall, Irving Hall and the County

Democracy. A movement to obtain non-partisan government caused the independent nomination of Allan Campbell for Mayor. The Republicans indorsed him, but their support was greatly weakened by their nomination of a spoils politician, John J. O'Brien, for County Clerk. The three Democratic factions agreed on Franklin Edson, who was elected by a majority of 21,417, the vote being: Edson, 97,802; Campbell, 76,385.

In the Chicago national convention of 1884 the Tammany delegation bitterly opposed the nomination of Grover Cleveland, its orators virulently assailing his private and public character. Though professing afterward to support him as the Democratic candidate, the Wigwam refused to unite with other Democratic organizations in any political demonstration. The reason seems to have been Mr. Cleveland's publicly expressed independence of Kelly and his machine. After the ensuing election, Tammany was generally charged with treachery. The Wigwam nominated a separate city and county ticket, naming Hugh J. Grant for Mayor. The County Democracy and Irving Hall agreed upon the nomination of former Mayor William R. Grace, and elected him with the rest of the fusion ticket, the vote being: Grace, 96,288; Grant, 86,361; Frederick S. Gibbs (Republican), 45,386.

The "Boodle Aldermen."

In these years the control of the city offices was frequently divided among the various parties and factions. In the Board of Aldermen, as in the departments, were Tammany and County Democracy men and Republicans, so that no one faction or party completely swayed the city. Much of their former power had been restored to the Aldermen by the charter amendments of 1873, by the State constitution of 1874 and various legislative acts. Reports arose from time to time that money was used to secure confirmation of appointments by the Aldermen, but the nearest approach to detail was the testimony of Patrick H. McCann before the "Fassett Committee" in 1890.

Mr. McCann testified that Richard Croker, a brother-in-law, came to his store in 1884, with a bag containing $180,000, which, he said, was to be used in obtaining Aldermanic votes to secure the confirmation, in case of his appointment, of Hugh J. Grant as Public Works Commissioner, and that he (Mr. Croker) was to get ten cents a barrel on all cement used by that department.¹ Mr. McCann further testified that Mr. Croker had told him that $80,000 of this sum was furnished by Mr. Grant, and the remainder by the organization. Mr. Croker, according to the same testimony, opened negotiations through Thomas D. Adams for the purchase of two Republican Aldermen, whose votes were needed. The alleged "deal," however, was not consummated, and the money was returned. Mr. Croker and Mr. Grant both swore that these statements were untrue.²

But the extraordinary corruption of the Board of Aldermen of 1884 is a matter of public record. Twenty-one members—the exceptions among those present and voting being Aldermen Grant and O'Connor—voted to give the franchise for a surface railway on Broadway to the Broadway Surface Railroad Company.¹ The rival road, the Broadway Railroad Company, sought to bribe the Aldermen with $750,000, half cash and half bonds, but the Aldermen thought the bonds might be traced, and considered it wiser to accept the $500,000 cash offered by the former,² each Alderman receiving $22,000.³ Mayor Edson vetoed the resolution,⁴ but it was repassed.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, I : 682-98.

² Ibid., 738, and Ibid., II : 1698.

Other street railway franchises were passed by the same board. Mr. McCann testified in 1890 that Mr. Grant had told him that Mr. Croker strongly advised him [Grant] not to have anything to do with "that Broadway matter," as "they [the other Aldermen] would be caught."⁵ Mr. Grant denied having said so.⁶ The fact remains that Mr. Grant was the only Tammany Alderman free of suspicion. Many of the accused Tammany city fathers were members of the organization's executive committee, which was composed almost exclusively of leaders, and which was supposed to direct the Wigwam's affairs.⁷

One Alderman, Henry W. Jaehne, was sentenced to penal servitude at hard labor for the term of nine years and ten months ; and another, "Honest" John O'Neill, to four years and a half, and to pay a fine of $2,000 ; a third, Arthur J. McQuade, was sentenced to seven years and ordered to return $5,000 of the bribe money to the

¹ Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, CLXXV : 237-39.

² Alderman Arthur J. McQuade's testimony before Recorder Smythe, November 19, 1886.

³ Alderman Fullgraff's additional testimony before Recorder Smythe.

⁴ Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen, CLXXVI : 777-84.

⁵ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, I : 706-7.

⁶ Ibid., I : 752. ⁷ Ibid. : 744.

city, but on July 20, 1889, at a new trial at Ballston, he was acquitted. Six other Aldermen fled to Canada, and three turned State's evidence. Ten others were indicted, but were never brought to trial. As Col. John R. Fellows, the District Attorney who tried the cases, stated to the Fassett Committee, convictions could not then (1890) be secured, because public sentiment had changed; the storm had subsided; people had grown tired of the subject, and many former opponents of the franchise had come to look upon it as a benefit.¹ But there were strong hints that political influence had saved many persons from prison.

Though the facts did not come out until the trials in 1886, public indignation and suspicion were so strong in 1884 that Kelly insisted that the Tammany Aldermen who had voted for the franchise should not be re-nominated.²

Death of Kelly.

Kelly broke down with nervous and physical prostration after the Presidential campaign of 1884. Grover Cleveland's election, which falsified his predictions, deeply disappointed him. He kept to his house, No. 34 East Sixty-ninth street, but still issued his orders to the Tammany organization. Towards the end, he could not sleep except by the use of opiates. He died on June 1, 1886.

Thus passed away the second absolute "boss" of Tammany Hall. For more than ten years 50,000 voters obeyed his commands, and it was he and not the people to whom a host of office-holders, contractors, and all who profited directly or indirectly from politics, looked as the source of their appointment, employment or emolument. On more than one occasion Kelly complained of his onerous duty of providing government for New York City. The secret of his control was the same as that of Tweed and of the previous cliques: he knew that a large part of the voting mass cared nothing for good government, but looked upon politics solely as a means of livelihood; that another large part were satisfied to vote the "regular" ticket under any and all circumstances; and, with a keen understanding of human nature, he knew how to harmonize conflicting interests, to allay personal differences, and to soothe with large promises of future rewards his disaffected followers. Profiting by Tweed's fate, he knew the value of moderation; and he earned the praise, not only of his interested followers, but also of a tolerant and easy-going class in the community, through the fact that under his rule the stealing, compared to that of the Tweed regime, was kept at a comparatively respectable minimum. It was pointed out to his credit that the fortune he left—reputed to be $500,000—was very reasonable for one who so long had held real control of a great city.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, III: 2667-68.

² Testimony of Hugh J. Grant, ibid., I: 789.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF RICHARD CROKER.

1886-1897.

Upon the death of Kelly, the twenty-four leaders of the Assembly Districts, comprising the executive committee of Tammany Hall, announced individually that there would be no further "boss," and that the organization would be ruled thenceforth by a committee of twenty-four. However, cliques immediately arose, and soon four leaders—Richard Croker, who had been a sort of deputy "boss" under Kelly; Hugh J. Grant, Thomas F. Gilroy and W. Bourke Cockran—arranged a junta for administering the organization's affairs. By securing the support of 17 of the 24 leaders, Mr. Croker began concentrating power in his own hands, and since about 1888 has remained the absolute "boss" of both society and organization.

Mr. Croker's Early Career.

Mr. Croker was born near Cork, Ireland, November 24, 1843. His father was a blacksmith, who emigrated to America in 1846, and settled in a squatter's shanty in what is now the upper portion of Central Park. From his thirteenth to his nineteenth year young Croker worked as a machinist. At a very early age he distinguished himself in the semi-social fist-fights which were a part of the life of the "gang" to which he belonged. He became, tradition has it, the leader of the "Fourth Avenue Tunnel Gang," and fought a number of formal prize-fights, in which he came out victor.

At the beginning of the Tweed regime, according to his testimony before the Fassett Committee, he was an attendant under Judge Barnard and other Judges in the Supreme Court. Upon leaving that place, for some reason not known, he served as an engineer on a Fire Department steamer.¹ In 1868 and 1869 he was elected an Alderman. With a majority of his fellow-members, he sided with the Young Democracy against Tweed, and was accordingly, with the rest of the board, legislated out of office (April, 1870). But he must have made his peace with the "Boss" soon after, for Controller Connolly appointed him Superintendent of Market Fees and Rents. In 1873 he was elected Coroner. On election day, November 3, 1874, during a street row growing out of a political quarrel between Mr. Croker and James O'Brien, John McKenna was shot dead. Bystanders maintained that Mr. Croker fired the shot, and the Grand Jury indicted him for the crime. The trial jury, after being out for seventeen hours, failed to agree. Public opinion at the time was divided, but it is the preponderance of opinion among those who are in a position to know, that Mr. Croker did not fire the fatal shot.

In 1876 he was re-elected Coroner. In 1883 he ran for Alderman, with the understanding that if elected, thus establishing the fact of his constituents' approval, Mayor Edson would appoint him a Fire Commissioner. During the canvass, a Police Captain, one of Croker's protégés, was responsible for a brutal clubbing, the feeling over which had the effect of reducing his plurality to about 200. Mayor Edson, however, gave him the appointment, and he was reappointed by Mayor Hewitt. His alleged connection with the fund of $180,000 to be used in behalf of Hugh J. Grant, in 1884, has already been mentioned. In 1885 he caused the nomination of the latter for Sheriff. Mr. Grant, while in that office, according to Mr. McCann's testimony, gave $25,000, in five presents of $5,000 each, to Mr. Croker's two-year old daughter Flossie.¹

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, II: 1708-12.

Neither Mr. Croker nor Mr. Grant denied this transaction, though both declared the sum was $10,000 and not $25,000.² Mr. Grant furthermore declared that he gave it in consideration of Flossie being his god-child.

Municipal Campaign of 1886.

Mr. Croker showed the sagacity common to a long line of Tammany chiefs in the municipal campaign of 1886. It was a time of great excitement. The labor unions, including the Knights of Labor, had reached the highest point in organization and in solidarity of feeling ever attained by them in the history of the city. Knowing their strength, they were ripe for independent political action, and they were rendered all the more ready for it by the earnest social propaganda carried on at the time by Single-Taxers, Socialists and social reformers generally.

The conviction of certain members of a union for carrying on a boycott against the Thiess establishment, on Fourteenth street, proved the one impulse needed for the massing together of all the various clubs and unions into one mighty movement. The convictions were believed to be illegal, and moreover to have been fraudulently obtained—and Tammany was held responsible. Before long the nucleus of an independent political party was formed. Henry George, then at the height of his popularity, was looked upon as the logical leader, and he was asked to become the new party's candidate for Mayor. To this request he gave an affirmative answer, contingent upon the securing of 25,000 signatures to his nominating petition.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, I: 707-8.

² Ibid.: 745-50, and Ibid., II: 1701.

Mr. Croker saw the danger, and he took immediate steps to avert it. According to the open letter of Henry George to Abram S. Hewitt, October 17, 1897, Mr. Croker, in behalf of Tammany Hall and the County Democracy, tried to buy off George by offering him a nomination regarded as equivalent to an election. George, of course, refused; the 25,000 names, or a great part of them, were secured; a nominating convention was held; George was formally nominated, and the United Labor party was launched. A spirited campaign in George's behalf was at once begun, and was responded to by the masses with remarkable enthusiasm.

Mr. Croker was equal to the crisis. The agitation among the masses must be met by the nomination of a representative of the conservative interests, and a general appeal be made for the "saving of society." Accordingly he chose as the Tammany candidate the County Democracy's choice, Abram S. Hewitt.

The Republicans nominated Theodore Roosevelt. His candidacy, however, was not regarded so seriously as otherwise it might have been, for the contest narrowed down at once to a class struggle between George and Mr. Hewitt. Anarchy and every other social ill were prophesied by the conservatives as the certain results of the former's election, and Republicans were openly urged to support the latter.

The result proved the keenness of Mr. Croker's foresight. The vote stood : Hewitt, 90,552 ; George, 68,110 ; Roosevelt, 60,435. Yet it would be difficult to name a time in recent years, if the reiterated statements of reputable eye-witnesses are to be believed, when frauds so glaring and so tremendous in the aggregate have been employed in behalf of any candidate as were committed in behalf of Mr. Hewitt in 1886. There are few living men among the earnest band who supported George's interests at the polls on that election day who do not believe that their candidate was grossly "counted out."

Wigwam Rejects Mayor Hewitt.

Mayor Hewitt revealed an independence of character that astonished the Wigwam. Before many months he had antagonized its powerful leaders. By 1888 the United Labor party had dwindled into a faction, and there being no such compelling reason, as in 1886, for choosing a candidate outside of the organization, the chiefs selected one of their own number, Hugh J. Grant. Mr. Hewitt was nominated by the County Democracy, Joel B. Erhardt by the Republicans, and James J. Coogan by the remnant of the United Labor party. The vote was as follows : Grant, 114,111 ; Erhardt, 73,037 ; Hewitt, 71,979 ; Coogan, 9,809. For Grover Cleveland, whom Tammany had this time supported at the nominating convention, the city gave a plurality of 55,831, out of a total vote of about 270,000.

The Flack Case.

One of the Tammany men elected was James A. Flack, Grand Sachem of the society (1888-1889), who assumed the duties of Sheriff the following January. During the same year Flack surreptitiously and fraudulently obtained a divorce in order to remarry. His wife was the ostensible plaintiff, but it was shown that she knew nothing of the suit. Flack and his accomplices were indicted by the Grand Jury, whereupon he was tried and sentenced to two months in the Tombs prison, and to pay a fine of $500. The Supreme Court later affirmed the sentence. Some others implicated also went to prison. The scandal was such that Flack was removed from the Sheriff's office, and was forced to resign as Grand Sachem of the society.

Disclosures of 1890.

Tammany was now in practically complete control, and carried things with a high hand. Most of the departments had again become inefficient and corrupt. On March 21, 1890, the Grand Jury handed down a presentment stating that the Sheriff's office, which for twenty years had been a hotbed of corruption, had recently been brought into "public scandal and infamy," through the growth of notorious abuses; that in 1889 the Sheriff's net profits had been at least $50,000, not including certain "extra compensations that could not be ascertained." Many other abuses, the Grand Jury further recited, were found to be connected with the management of this office, and also with the conduct of the Ludlow Street Jail.

At about the same time the State Senate Committee on Cities, headed by J. Sloat Fassett, a Republican, undertook an investigation. Though subjected to the charges of lukewarmness and bargaining, this body, popularly known as the "Fassett Committee," brought out much valuable information. Part of its testimony has already been referred to. It is impossible even to summarize the vast total embodied in the 3,650 printed pages of its report, but some of the more interesting particulars may be briefly touched upon.

Henry S. Ives and George H. Stayner testified that, while prisoners at Ludlow Street Jail, they had paid, for various favors, $10,000 to Warden James P. Keating, then and now a prominent Tammany leader, and that previously they had paid other large amounts to certain Deputy Sheriffs.¹

John F. B. Smyth testified that when Sheriff Grant had appointed him Sheriff's auctioneer—the most valuable gift at the Sheriff's disposal—the latter suggested his having as a partner ex-Alderman Kirk (one of the Aldermen of 1884 indicted in connection with the Broadway Surface Railroad franchise),² saying that the organization insisted on having "one-half of it [the loot] go to somebody else." In less than a year the gross proceeds amounted to about $20,000. Of this, $10,000 went to various Deputy Sheriffs, one of whom

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, I: 285-52, and Ibid.: 800.

² Kirk had been dropped from the Council of Sachems in 1886 owing to the disclosures.

was Bernard F. Martin, frequently Sachem and another noted Tammany leader.¹

A copious amount of similar testimony was brought out implicating many other Tammany leaders, and showing that the Sheriff's known income from the office ranged from $60,000 to $75,000 a year.² Thomas P. Taylor, a lawyer, swore that one of his clients in 1888 had had a claim of about $4,000 in the Sheriff's hands, and that William H. Clark, a Sachem and a powerful Tammany leader, the partner of W. Bourke Cockran, and sometime Corporation Counsel, had asked him (Taylor), "what he would give to get it." Mr. Taylor further testified that he had given nothing, and that he had secured only a few hundred dollars of the amount, after much trouble.³ Clark denied the charge.⁴

Corruption, favoritism and blackmail were charged against all the other departments controlled by Tammany, though in the Police and Excise departments, Republican and Tammany commissioners alike were shown to have winked at the abuses. Gambling houses had to pay at least $25 a week for protection,⁵ and revenue was likewise derived from every place or person capable of being blackmailed. The testimony strongly pointed to the probability that as much as $10,000 had been paid to get a certain saloon license, though there was no absolute verification of the statement.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, I: 282-87. Bernard, or "Barney," Martin and two others had been indicted on the ground of having been bribed, but the indictments were dismissed in March, 1890, on a technicality which allowed the defendants to fall back upon the Statute of Limitations.

² Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, I: 344.

³ Ibid.: 502-11.

⁴ Ibid.: 513.

⁵ Ibid., II: 1244.

One interesting fact officially brought out—a fact long generally known, however, and stated heretofore in this work—was that the Wiskinskie of the Tammany Society, nominally a city employee, was the official agent of the organization in collecting assessments, said to vary from 5 to 10 per cent., on the salaries of every Tammany office-holder. In fact, Mr. Croker unhesitatingly admitted before the Fassett Committee, that at that time it cost from $50,000 to $75,000 to run the organization successfully.¹ Considerable sums were likewise derived from assessments on candidates. Mr. Hewitt, it was said, contributed $12,000 in 1886, but Mr. Croker developed a very poor memory when questioned about this and contributions from many Judges and other office-holders.²

Citizens' Movement of 1890.

The revelations, as usual, caused the formation of a citizens' movement, and a strong combination of Republicans, Democrats and independents was formed, under the name of the "People's Municipal League," for the purpose of ousting Tammany. Francis M. Scott, a Democrat, was nominated for Mayor, and a vigorous campaign was waged. Tammany minimized the disclosures, and renominated Mr. Grant. A Democratic tidal wave swept the nation in the Fall of 1890, and on this wave the Tammany ticket was carried to victory, the local majority being 23,199.

The effect on the society and the organization of this victory, following so closely upon the Fassett revelations, was to impress the Tammany men with an added sense of security. Accordingly, by tacit understanding, smirches made upon reputations before the Fassett Committee were to constitute no bar to political advancement, and the old condition of things in the departments was to continue. Many of those who had suffered most at the hands of the Senatorial inquisitors were elected during the next four years to places in the society and to public offices. Irving Hall and the County Democracy passed out of existence, and Tammany had full sway. Administrative corruption continued, and frauds at the polls, despite certain improvements in the ballot laws instituted in 1890, developed to a science, reaching their climax in 1893.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, II: 1756.

² Ibid.: 1757-62.

Tammany's Great Victory of 1892.

In 1892 Tammany fought the nomination of Mr. Cleveland for President, though it supported him after his selection. Thomas F. Gilroy, Grand Sachem (1892-94) was nominated for Mayor, the Republicans presenting Edwin Einstein. A Democratic landslide marked the election, and the Tammany candidates won by practically the same majority as that given to Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Gilroy receiving 173,510, and Mr. Einstein, 97,923 votes. Frauds were numerous, as usual. The opposition vote in a number of election districts was practically nothing. A certain Tammany politician, now a State Senator, from the lower end of town, stood in the envious wonder of his fellows for a whole year following, for having secured for the ticket all the votes but four in his election district.

Election Frauds of 1893.

The fame of this enterprising worker aroused a determination in the breasts of others to exceed his record. During the next campaign (1893) the general indignation against the corrupt conduct of Judge Maynard, brought out a strong opposition to his elevation to the bench of the Court of Appeals. Senator Hill caused his nomination, Tammany supported him, and the word was passed around that he must be elected at all hazards. As a consequence, frauds of the gravest character were committed throughout the city. The Tammany leader of the Second Assembly District, zealous to outdo the record of the previous year, offered prizes to his election district captains for the best results. The election overturned all known records. The successful competitor brought in a poll of 369 to 0. In two other precincts no opposition votes of any kind were counted, despite the presence of Republican inspectors, and the fact that Republicans, Socialists, Populists and Prohibitionists afterward swore under oath that they had voted for their respective candidates. The vote in this assembly district, nominally 8,000, rose to nearly 13,000.

A committee from the Populist County Committee, the local branch of the National People's party, immediately took steps to secure evidence through which to effect the punishment of the lawbreakers.¹ The evidence secured, with that afterwards obtained by the Republican County Committee, the City Club, the Good ¹ The credit for instituting this prosecution has been variously, and sometimes impudently, claimed. There is no doubt, however, that not only the first, but the most important evidence, was furnished by this committee, whose practical head was William A. Ellis, of the Second Assembly District.

Government clubs, and the Bar Association, was submitted to the Grand Jury, upon which some sixty indictments were handed down. A number of convictions were obtained, and several Tammany and assistant Tammany election officers were sent to prison. The Tammany leader of the Second Assembly District went to California immediately after the agitation began, and remained there until the affair blew over. In the election the following year the vote of this district fell to the old figures of approximately 8,000.

The Lexow Disclosures.

The city had again become scandalously corrupt. The bi-partisan boards, which originally had been established in the hope of applying some check to the general rascality, had merely furnished greater opportunities for deals and political bargaining. Charges of blackmail, extortion, of immunity given to crime, and most other forms of administrative venality, grew so common that again the State Senate sent (April, 1894), a committee to the city to investigate. This was the body commonly known as the "Lexow Committee," from its chairman, Clarence Lexow. Its counsel, John W. Goff, vigorously conducted the investigation, and the result was a mass of information regarding Tammany methods of government such as the public had not known since the exposures of Tweed's time. We can but touch upon the testimony.

It was shown that during each of the years 1891, 1892 and 1893, many thousands of fraudulent ballots had been cast by the active co-operation and connivance of the police ; Police Captains were appointed from those members of the force who especially connived at these frauds, the appointments being made by the President of the Board of Police (who was one of the most conspicuous Wigwam leaders) at the instance of the organization. Tammany influences permeated the Police Department to such a degree that the district leaders dictated appointments, and from Captain down almost the entire force joined the Tammany district associations. Forced contributions were levied upon the members for the benefit of Wigwam district organizations.

Capt. Creedon confessed to paying $15,000 to secure a promotion to a Captaincy, and Capt. Schmittberger, to having secured the appointment of another man as Captain, in consideration of the payment of $12,000. The average cost of obtaining an appointment as policeman was $300. The police functionaries recouped themselves in various ways. Vice and crime were protected openly. One woman who kept a number of houses of ill-repute testified that she had paid continuously for protection an aggregate of $30,000 or more. The system reached such a perfection in detail that a ratable charge was placed upon each house according to the number of inmates, the protection prices ranging from $25 to $50 monthly. Women of the streets paid patrolmen for permission to solicit, and divided proceeds. Visitors were robbed systematically, and the plunder was divided with the police. More than 600 policy shops paid at the monthly rate of $15, while pool rooms paid $300 a month. It was noted by the committee, as a remarkable fact, that when public agitation grew very strong, a private citizen, Richard Croker, secured the closing of these places practically in a single day. Every form of gambling had to pay high prices for immunity. Green goods swindlers were required to make monthly payments, to subdivide the city into districts, and additionally, in case the victim "squealed," to give one-half of the plunder to either ward or headquarters detectives. Saloons paid $20 monthly, according "to the established custom." The police also acted in collusion with thieves and dishonest pawnbrokers. Almost every branch of trade and commerce was forced to make monthly payments, and from every possible source tribute was wrung.

The committee incorporated in its testimony the estimate of Foreman Tabor, of the Grand Jury, in March, 1892, that the annual income derived from blackmailing and different sources of extortion was $7,000,000.¹ In this estimate there were probably not included the large sums paid by corporations of every kind, and all who sought the favor or feared the power of Tammany Hall.

The two Democratic members of the Police Board at this time were James J. Martin, one of the powerful district leaders, and John C. Sheehan, who became deputy "boss" during Mr. Croker's absence. No direct evidence was given to establish their complicity in the general extortion, but John McClave, the Republican Commissioner resigned after a searching and pointed examination.

Mr. Croker did not testify before the Lexow Committee, urgent business demanding his presence in England throughout the investigation.

¹ "Investigation of the Police Department," etc., 1894, V: 5734.

Tammany Overthrown.

The public was aroused as it had not been since 1871. An earnest agitation for reform, largely due to the crusade of Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, and to the work of the City Club and the Good Government clubs, was begun. A Committee of Seventy, composed of representatives of all classes, was formed to carry on a political contest, and an enthusiastic support was given to it by the great mass of the public throughout the campaign. William L. Strong, a Republican and a prominent dry goods merchant, was nominated by the Seventy for Mayor, and the Republicans indorsed him. Tammany, after floundering about for several weeks in the vain hope of securing a candidate strong enough to stem the opposing tide, selected at first Nathan Straus, who withdrew, and then Hugh J. Grant, making its campaign largely on the ground that Mr. Grant was the only unsmirched Tammany member of the "Boodle" Board of Aldermen of 1884. The contest was bitter and determined on both sides, Tammany putting forth its utmost efforts to avert the inevitable disaster. According to a statement of John C. Sheehan, the organization expended more money in this election than in any election in recent years.

The convictions of the previous year had served to cool the zeal of the Tammany workers for records at the polls. In consequence of this, and of further changes in the manner of balloting, New York enjoyed probably the most fairly conducted election of any since the first organized effort of Tammany men at the polls in 1800. Strong was elected by a majority of 45,187. With his election went nearly the whole of the city patronage, changes in the new constitution (1894) having greatly centralized the city's administrative functions in the Mayor's hands. Tammany was thus thrust out again.

The Reform Administration.

Mayor Strong's administration on the whole was beneficial. The city budget went up to nearly $44,000,000, but for the first time since Mayor Havemeyer's time the streets were kept clean—a result due to the systematic energy of Col. George E. Waring, Jr. Moreover, new schools were built, new parks laid out, streets asphalted, improvements planned and carried out, while administrative corruption was almost unheard of. Not the least of the benefits of this administration was the partial reform of the Police Department, through the efforts of Police Commissioner Theodore Roosevelt, and his fellow Commissioners, Avery D. Andrews, Andrew D. Parker and Frank Moss.

Mr. Croker as "Boss."

In the mean time Richard Croker spent most of his time in England. From being a comparatively poor man, as he testified in 1890, he became suddenly rich. From April, 1889, to February, 1890, he was City Chamberlain, at a salary of $25,000 a year, but since then has held no public office. Within two years, however, he was able, according to common report, to buy an interest in the Belle Meade stock farm for $250,000, paying additionally $109,000 for Longstreet and other race horses. Later, he built a new house, said to cost over $200,000, and lavishly spent money, and displayed the evidences of wealth in other ways.

When in the city he is, and has been for a number of years, in the real estate business. He is popularly credited with having been interested in the passage and development of certain extremely valuable franchises which were obtained from the Legislature and Board of Aldermen for almost nothing. In 1892 he was reputed to dominate the Legislature, as he did the city, and the lobby disappeared. It was related at the time that all applicants for favors or for relief from hostile measures were advised "to see headquarters."

One of the franchises granted during that year was the "Huckleberry franchise," for a street railway in the Annexed District—a grant which was worth at the time fully $2,000,000, and yet was practically given away under circumstances of great scandal.¹ When testifying before the Mazet Committee in 1899, he was asked whether he had owned, in 1892, 800 shares of the stock of this road, but declined to state.² Another illustration of Mr. Croker's alleged diversified interests was furnished by a statement said to have been inspired by John C. Sheehan and published on December 23, 1900. Mr. Sheehan asserted that in 1894 he and Mr. Croker were interested in a company formed with a capital of $5,000,000 for the construction of the rapid transit tunnel. Mr. Sheehan, the statement read, forced through the Board of Aldermen a resolution approving the tunnel route which he and Mr. Croker had selected as the most feasible. The statement further set forth that Mr. Croker had $500,000 worth of this company's stock, which came to him gratuitously, and that he and Mr. Sheehan had been also mutually interested in a proposed surety company.

¹ See "A History of Public Franchises in New York City," by the author.

² Stenographic minutes: 699. These minutes, it is understood, are not to be published by the Legislature.

As chairman of the finance committee of Tammany Hall (a post Tweed and Kelly had held, and which carried with it the titular leadership of the organization), all the vast funds contributed for Tammany's campaigns have passed through his hands. As he himself testified, the finance committee keeps no books.¹

Whether Mr. Croker has been at home or abroad, his control of the Wigwam has been absolute. Long since, he inaugurated the system of "turning down" any man that disobeyed orders.

At the time of Mr. Bryan's nomination, in 1896, Mr. Croker was in England. His three years' racing experience there cost him, it was reported, between $600,000 and $700,000. He remained abroad, leaving the organization, as we have mentioned, in charge of John C. Sheehan as a kind of vicegerent. Mr. Sheehan's public record in Buffalo had been severely criticised, and many organization men had protested against his being put in charge. This protest, however, was generally understood at the time to be founded not so much on the matter of Mr. Sheehan's record as on that of his being an interloper from another section of the State. Tammany that year ignored the national Democratic platform. Though ratifying Mr. Bryan's nomination, a general apathy prevailed at the Wigwam throughout the campaign, and the more radical Democrats repeatedly charged the leaders with treachery to the ticket. The result of this apathy and of other influences was that Mr. McKinley carried the city by over 20,000 plurality.

¹ Testimony Senate Committee on Cities, 1890, II: 1755. Mr. Sheehan in the statement cited stated that when, in 1894, Mr. Croker sent an order to the district leaders requiring that district assessments amounting to $35,000 should be paid before March 1, the payments were promptly made.

Mr. Croker finally returned home in September, 1897, shortly before the meeting of the Democratic city convention. It was commonly believed that Mr. Sheehan, the deputy "boss," had made preparations to assume the "boss-ship" himself, Mr. Sheehan emphatically denies this. Whatever the circumstances were Mr. Croker promptly deprived the former of power, and later succeeded in practically excluding him from the organization.

The Election of 1897.

The "Boss's" supreme control of city politics was illustrated by the nomination for Mayor of Greater New York of Robert C. Van Wyck, who was in no sense the organization's candidate, but represented merely Mr. Croker's choice and dictation. The Citizens' Union nominated Seth Low, who probably would have been elected had the Republicans indorsed him. But the latter nominated Benjamin F. Tracy, thus dividing the opposition, which was still further disintegrated by the action of the Jeffersonian Democrats in nominating Henry George, and later Henry George, Jr., upon the noted economist dying in the heat of the campaign. The canvass was carried on with the greatest vigor, for under the Greater New York charter all the territory now embraced in the city limits was to vote for one Mayor, with a four-year's term, and almost dictatorial power in the matter of appointments and removals. In his statement, heretofore referred to, Mr. Sheehan asserted that during this campaign he personally collected and turned over to John McQuade,¹ the treasurer of Tammany Hall, the sum of $260,000, irrespective of contributions collected by others, and that at the end of the canvass Mr. McQuade had $50,000 in the treasury.²

The vote stood : Van Wyck, 233,997 ; Low, 151,540 ; Tracy, 101,863 ; George, 21,693 ; scattering, 17,464. The Wigwam was beside itself with joy ; the victory meant absolute control of the greater city's annual budget of over $90,000,000, not to speak of the tens of millions more derived from rents, fees, fines, interest, assessments for street improvements, bond sales and premiums, and from those vast and varied sources of contract juggling, selling of legislative "goods," and all the other avenues, too numerous to enumerate, of which Tammany from early times has availed itself. It also meant the control of an army of employees, now estimated at 60,000. The disreputable classes vociferously celebrated the occasion, assured that the town was once more to be "wide open."

¹ Mr. McQuade was associated with Tweed, as a commissioner, in the building of the Harlem Court House. The testimony brought out in the case of Henry A. Smalley vs. The Mayor, etc., before Judge Donohue, in the Supreme Court, January 28, 1878, showed that the value of all the material used in the building was $66,386, but that the Finance Department had paid out for this material $268,580.

² Early in 1898 Tammany Hall, with considerable display, disposed of most of this fund, by giving $20,000 for the poor of the city and a like sum for the Cuban cause.

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF RICHARD CROKER (Concluded).

1897-1901.

Now that Tammany was reinstalled in almost absolute power, Mr. Croker set about choosing the important city officials to be appointed by the Mayor. He frankly admitted before the Mazet Committee, in 1899, that practically all of them were selected by him or his immediate associates. Requiring a routine assistant in the work of "bossing," Mr. Croker selected John F. Carroll, who thereupon resigned the office of Clerk of the Court of General Sessions, which yielded, it was estimated, about $12,000 a year, to take a post with no apparent salary. Mr. Croker then returned to horse-racing in England.

"Wise, Honest and Economical."

The public pronouncements of the organization continued to voice the old-time characteristic pretensions of that body's frugality, honesty and submission to the popular will. In October, 1898, the county convention in the Wigwam passed resolutions commending "the wise, honest and economical" Tammany administration of Greater New York, and denouncing the "corruption, extravagance and waste of the infamous mismanagement" by the previous reform administration. Yet at this very moment the Bar Association was protesting against Mr. Croker's refusal to renominate Judge

Joseph F. Daly,¹ on the ground of his refusing to hand over the patronage of his court. The convention itself, despite its fine words, acted merely as the register of the will of one man, with scarcely the formality of a contest; and the public had again become agitated over the certainty of grave scandals in the public service.

Tammany's election fund this year was generally reputed to be in the neighborhood of $100,000. As much as $500 was spent in each of several hotly contested election districts. Tammany won, but by a margin less than had been expected and, in fact, arranged for. The State Superintendent of Elections, John McCullough, in his annual report (January, 1899) to Gov. Roosevelt, gave good grounds for believing that Tammany had been deprived of a large support on which it had counted. Of 13,104 persons registered from specified lodging houses in certain strong Tammany districts, only 4,034 voted. It was evident that colonization frauds on a large scale had been attempted, and had been frustrated only by the vigilance of Superintendent McCullough.

The Mazet Inquiry.

The state of administrative affairs in the city grew worse and worse, nearly approximating that of 1893-94. The Legislature again determined to investigate, and accordingly sent to the city the special committee of the Assembly, popularly known as the "Mazet Committee."

¹ Tweed testified in 1877 that Joseph F. Daly, with two others, constituted the sole membership of the "Citizens' Association" of 1870, and that he had placated the three men by giving them offices, Mr. Daly securing a Judgeship of the Court of Common Pleas.

This body's prestige suffered from the charge that its investigation was unduly partisan. Moreover, it was generally felt by the public that its work was inefficiently carried on. Nevertheless, it produced a considerable array of facts showing the existence of gross maladministration.

It was disclosed that every member of the Tammany Society or of the organization's executive committee, held office, or was a favored contractor. Over $700,000 of city orders went to favored contractors without bidding. Various city departments were "characterized by unparalleled ignorance and unfairness." The payrolls in some of the most important departments had increased $1,500,000 between July 1, 1898, and September 1, 1899, and the employees had increased over 1,000, excluding policemen, firemen and teachers. The testimony proved the increasing inefficiency and demoralization of the Police and Fire Departments. It further proved the existence of a ramified system of corruption similar to that revealed by the Lexow Committee.

Ice Trust and Ramapo.

The disclosures attracting the greatest public attention were those relating to the Ice Trust, the Ramapo project, and Mr. Croker's relations to the city government. On April 14 the committee exposed a conspiracy between the Ice Trust and the Dock and other departments of the city government, to create and maintain a monopoly of New York's ice supply. Six days after the exposure, Mayor Van Wyck, as he subsequently admitted in his testimony before Judge Gaynor, acquired 5,000 shares, worth $500,000, of the Ice Trust stock, alleging that he paid $57,000 in cash for them; but although urged to substantiate his statement, did not produce proof that he actually paid anything. It was shown conclusively before the committee that the arrangement between the Ice Trust and the city officials was such as to compel the people to pay 60 cents a hundred pounds, and that the trust had stopped the sale of five-cent pieces of ice, practically cutting off the supply of the very poor. Many other Tammany officials were equally involved. Proceedings were begun some time after, looking to an official investigation of the Ice Trust's affairs, and charges against Mayor Van Wyck were filed with Gov. Roosevelt. The former are still pending; the latter were finally dismissed by the Governor in November, 1900.

In August, the committee uncovered the Ramapo scheme. The Ramapo Water Company, with assets "of at least the value of $5,000," sought to foist upon the city a contract calling for payment from the city treasury of over $200,000,000, in annual installments of about $5,110,000, in return for at least 200,000,000 gallons of water a day, at $70 per million gallons. This was proved to be an attempt toward a most gigantic swindle. Had not Controller Coler exposed and frustrated the scheme, the Tammany members of the Board of Public Improvements would have rushed the contract to passage.

Mr. Croker and the City.

Mr. Croker's testimony threw a flood of light upon his political views and standards as well as his powers and emoluments as "boss." He acknowledged that he had a powerful influence over the Tammany legislators at Albany, whose actions he advised, and that he exercised the same influence upon local officials. He readily conceded that he was the most powerful man he knew of.¹ "We try to have a pretty effective organization," he said; "that is what we are there for."²

Mr. Croker also admitted that judicial candidates were assessed in their districts.³ In fact, some of the Judges themselves named the respective sums to the committee. Judge Pryor testified that he had been asked for $10,000 for his nomination for a vacant half-term in the Supreme Court.⁴ Other judicial candidates, it was understood, paid from $10,000 to $25,000 for nominations.⁵ Mr. Croker maintained that the organization was entitled to all the judicial, executive, administrative—in brief, all offices—because "that is what the people voted our ticket for."⁶ Mr. Croker refused to answer many questions tending to show that he profited by a silent partnership in many companies which benefit directly or indirectly by his power. "The man who is virtual ruler of the city," said Frank Moss and Francis E. Laimbeer, counsel to the committee, in their report, "can insure peace and advantage and business to any concern that takes him and his friends in, and can secure capital here or abroad to float any enterprise, when he guarantees that the city officials will not interfere with it." Mr. Croker was asked many other questions touching this subject, but gave little information. He declined to answer the question whether $140,-

¹ Stenographic minutes, 451.

² Ibid.: 465. ³ Ibid.: 6806. ⁴ Ibid.: 523.

⁵ Ibid.: 6891, etc. ⁶ Ibid.: 464.

000 of the stock of the Auto-Truck Company had been given to him without the payment of a dollar ; it was his " private affair."¹

" We are giving the people pure organization government," he said. He referred to the thoroughness of discipline in the Wigwam, and stated that the only way to succeed was to keep the whip in hand over his henchmen. It took a " a lot of time," and he " had to work very hard at it." Tammany was built up, he said, not only upon the political principles it held, but upon the way its members sustained one another in business. " We want the whole business, if we can get it;" " to the party belong the spoils;" " we win, and we expect every one to stand by us;" " I am working for my pocket all the time," were some of Mr. Croker's answers, most of them told in anything but grammatical English.

The general opinion obtained that the committee's work would have been far more effective and free from charges of partisan bias if Thomas C. Platt, the Republican " boss," had been summoned concerning his alleged political connection with the great corporations and financial interests, as Mr. Croker had been.

No Reform Effected.

Apparently the disclosures made no deep impression on the city administration, for matters went along pretty much as before. On March 9, 1900, the New York Times published a detailed statement, which it later reiterated, that the sum of $3,095,000 a year was being paid by the gambling-house keepers of the city to the "gambling-house commission," which, it said, was composed of two State Senators, a representative of the pool-room proprietors, and the head of one of the city departments. This commission, the account stated, received and passed upon applications, established the tariff to be paid by the applicants, and supervised the collections. Later, in the same month, the Grand Jury handed down a presentment arraigning the city officials for the sway enjoyed by the criminal and vicious classes.¹

¹ Stenographic minutes, 693.

Neither the Grand Jury's presentment, nor the Times's detailed statements, had the slightest effect on the conduct of the city administration. In November, however, a marked change occurred. For several years certain reform societies and ecclesiastical bodies, particularly the Episcopal Church, had sought to mitigate the open flaunting of immorality in the tenement houses of a particular police district on the East Side. The attempts had been resisted, not only by those living upon the proceeds of this immorality, but by the police themselves; and two ministers who had complained to certain police officials had been grossly insulted.

Immediately after the Presidential election, Bishop Henry C. Potter, of the Episcopal Church, in a stinging letter of complaint, brought the matter to the attention of Mayor Van Wyck. It was the psychologic moment for such an action, and it produced immediate results. Mr. Croker paused in his preparations for his usual trip to England long enough to give orders to put down the immorality complained of, and he appointed a committee of five to carry his mandate into effect, or at least to make some satisfactory show of doing so. He went further than this, for his orders included a general ukase to the lawbreakers of the city to "go slow," or in other words, to observe, until further advices from headquarters, a certain degree of moderation in their infractions of law and their outrages upon decency.

¹ On December 22, 1900, Gov. Roosevelt removed Asa Bird Gardiner, the Tammany District Attorney, who was popularly credited with having originated the phrase, "To hell with reform," for having encouraged the turbulent element to open resistance of the law at the election. Eugene A. Philbin, an independent Democrat, was appointed his successor. The latter promptly demanded the resignations of many of Mr. Gardiner's assistants. For eight years before his election Mr. Gardiner had been chairman of the Tammany Hall Legal Committee.

Here our narrative closes. At this writing, January, 1901, there is again evident the stirring of that public indignation against the city's misgovernment which repeatedly, in times past, has led to the temporary overthrow of Tammany Hall. If the new movement would win, it must profit by the lessons of the past; it must build up in the sobering light of old failures and mistakes. The political stream of the century is strewn with the wrecks of movements that had for their object the extinction of Tammany Hall—and Tammany still controls. In no narrow spirit of class dominancy—through no subserviency to particular interests, religious, landholding, or commercial—can the desired result be achieved. Only that movement founded on such broad and humane principles as will enable it to secure the sympathy and co-operation of the poor and disinherited, as well as of that growing mass among the better-fortuned whose ideal is social justice, can rightly expect to expel Tammany permanently from power.

PRESENT CHARACTER OF THE ORGANIZATION.

A concluding statement may appropriately be made of the character and workings of the Tammany Hall political organization of to-day. They offer, however, little of novelty compared with the distinctive characteristics which have marked the body for the ninety-five years since 1805, except in the elaboration and extension of particular features.

Tammany Hall, the most perfect piece of political mechanism in the world, is ruled ostensibly by the members through various committees; in reality, it is needless to say, by a "boss." The powers of the latter have been sufficiently described. It has an executive committee of thirty-six members who generally, though not invariably, are the district leaders. From the enrolled members of the organization, a general committee composed of over 5,000 persons is selected yearly. This general committee meets once a month, and is supposed to be the seat of all organic power, though it simply carries out the orders of the supreme leader, or "boss." If it did not, he could, by controlling the Sachems of the Tammany Society, order it out of the Wigwam; for clause 4, article III, of the by-laws, rules and regulations of the general committee, provides that "all meetings of the committee shall be held at Tammany Hall."¹

As the general committee must obey the "boss," so also must the individual member obey the general committee. Clause 19, of article X, provides that "any member refusing to comply with the decisions of the committee shall be liable to reprimand or expulsion." Until recently a provision read that no Democratic voter could vote at elections for the general committee, unless he was "acting in unison with Tammany Hall," but this clause had to be changed to accord with the new primary law. Every member obligates himself by article XIV to "recognize and sustain the organization of which this committee is the central representative body," and to "repudiate all hostile organizations."

¹ The rules, regulations and by-laws of the General Committee appear in the "Tammany Hall Souvenir," J. W. McDonald, 1898.

The general committee has standing committees on finance, correspondence, naturalization, printing, and a committee on organization of about 1,000 members in all, from each Assembly District. The general committee is made self-supporting by a system of dues, and the committee on organization in each district secures additional funds by "contributions" from saloons, business men and other agencies. The general committee sits as a county convention in October of each year, and goes through the form of nominating the candidates prescribed, and the committee on organization sits once a month, or as often as occasion requires, and among other things, arranges the details of the method of carrying the election.

It is the executive committee, however, that really directs the organization's internal affairs, and through which the "boss" issues his decrees.

The district leaders are expected to bring out the full vote in their respective districts, under penalty of forfeiting their seats and influence. The district leader must be a man of local popularity, and of good executive ability. Character is not demanded. One of the present leaders is a man who "has killed his man," and many others have been implicated directly or indirectly in schemes that have called forth public denunciation, and several have narrowly escaped prison. When Tammany is on its good behavior, the district leader who commits overt acts greatly shocking public morality, is compelled to resign. In each Assembly District is a Tammany club-house, supported partly from dues, and partly from "subscriptions" to chowder parties and other functions. Frequently employees of the city, even policemen and firemen of opposite political faiths, have been impressed as members. The district leader is expected to be popular and charitable. Occasionally he pays the rent of a poor widow, sees that certain of his constituents fare well, and sometimes gives Christmas dinners to large numbers of the needy. The participants in his benefits know that his money often comes from sources that would not bear investigation, but a hungry man does not consider nice moral distinctions. The reports on conditions in their districts, furnished by the leaders to the "boss," are thorough and generally accurate.

Below the district leaders are the leaders, or captains, of 892 election districts, into which the Assembly Districts are divided. The district leaders appoint these captains, and expect them to hold their districts, or if they should be Republican, to win them for Tammany. By means of this elaborate organization every voter in the city can be reached within twenty-four hours, and a house-to-house-canvass made which might decide a close election. When the order comes from the district leader, the captain sends out his underlings to find out who have not registered, and to see that the Tammany laggards attend to it. In some of the districts where many voters must receive "inducements" to register, the district leaders are abundantly supplied with funds from headquarters. The sources of these funds have been referred to. In addition to the fund gathered by the general committee of each district for its own use, there is a central fund that goes to headquarters. Whether this amounts to $100,000 or $1,000,000 no one out of a limited circle knows, for the "boss," or chairman of the finance committee, keeps no books and makes no accounting to anybody. Every office-holder, from the highest to the lowest, is assessed a certain percentage on his salary, the assessment being collected generally by the Wiskinskie of the society, who hitherto has been nominally a city employee, drawing a fair salary for services seldom performed. Many non-Tammany men are also assessed, and if city employees, they generally find it advisable to respond. If a policeman, or fireman, for instance, should refuse to pay, he would in all likelihood be transferred to a post remote from his home, and his chances of promotion would disappear. As we have shown, candidates pay large sums for "election expenses." Corporations of all kinds having interests capable of being harassed or ruined by the city government, contribute lavishly. Finally, the saloons, as well as the pool-rooms and other illegal resorts, are expected to contribute whenever called upon. The organization is, therefore, never at a loss for sources of revenue with which to carry on a campaign or turn an election.

INDEX.

- Abolition (of slavery) riots, 145.
 Ackerman, Simon, 28.
 Adams, John, 5.
 Adams, John Quincy, 5, 72, 73, 74, 85, 97.
 "Adjusted Claims" Act, 264.
 Aliens, prejudice against, 96; growing power of, 87, 151, 213; preponderance of, 250.
 Allen, Stephen, Mayor, 71, 103, 105, 126.
 Alley, Saul, 126.
 American Republican party (see Native American party).
 Anti-Masonic party, 98.
 Anti-Monopolists (see Equal Rights party).
 "Apollo Hall Democracy," 304.
 Arcularius, Philip I., 28.
 Aristocracy, bitterness against, 4, 96, 100.
 "Bank Conservatives," 132, 134.
 Bank, Manhattan, 16, 21; and scandal of same, 149; Merchants', 113; — of America, 113, 149; Chemical, 113; Seventh Ward, 115; Merchants', 118; Commercial, 122; State, 127.
 Banks (State), 106; fraudulent currency of, 116; try to retain control of Tammany, 132.
 Bank, United States, 99, 102, 105-9.
 Bar Association, 303, 330.
 Barker, Isaac O., 213, 214.
 Barker, Jacob, 15, 37, 53, 58, 78; trial of, 84.
 Barker, James W., 207.
 Barnard, George G., 267, 292, 299, 297.
 "Barnburner"—"Hunker" quarrel, 166, etc.
 Barr, Thomas, J., 194, 202.
 Barrett, George C., 233.
 Belmont, August, 275, 302.
 Bennett, James Gordon, 171.
 Berrian, Samuel L., 42.
 Bingham, John, defrauds city, 28.
 Birney, James G., 162-3.
 Bleecker, Anthony J., 213, 214.
 Bloodgood, John M., 139; trial of, 148; 171.
 Blunt, Orison, 246.
 Board of Special Audit, 271; huge thefts of, 273-74.
 Bogert, John A., 174.
 Boole, Francis I. A., 238, 242, 246-8.
 Bowne, Walter, 50; Mayor by fraud, 96; 103, 105, 143, 150.
 Brady, James T., 132, 171.
 Brady, William V., 167; defeated, 163.
 Broome, John L., 19, 61, 62.
 Brownell, J. Sherman, 167.
 Bryant, William Cullen, 118.
 Buchanan, James, 214, 215.
 Buckmaster, George, 48, 49.
 Burr, Aaron, 14; duel with Hamilton and downfall of, 22; 149.
 Cambreleng, Churchill C., 105, 107.
 Campbell, Allan, 314.
 Cardoso, Albert, 263, 297.
 Cass, Lewis, 169, 186.
 Cebra, John Y., 112.
 Charter (bank and insurance company) scandals, 113-16; 122, 127.
 Charter (of 1829), 92; (of 1846) 164; (of 1849) 204; (of 1853) 204; (of 1857) 218, 271; "Huckleberry" (of 1870), 270; "Tweed" (of 1870) 271; amendments to, (of 1873), 303.
 Cheatham, James, 31, 34.
 Choate, Joseph H., 296.

- Church, Sanford E., 302.
 Cincinnati, Society of, 4.
 "Citizens' Association" (of 1868), 373, 340.
 Citizens' Movement (of 1857), 223-24; (of 1861) 240.
 Citizens' Union (of 1897), 337.
 City Club, 333.
 City Hall, sale of, at auction, 316; abortive plan for new building, 224.
 City Reform party (of 1853), 203; success of, 205; failure of, 207.
 Civil War, Tammany's attitude towards, 232-4.
 Clark, Aaron, Mayor, 181, 140; defeated, 142.
 Clark, William H., 326.
 Clay, Henry, 97, 224.
 Cleveland, Grover, opposed by Tammany, 314; carries the city (1898), 324; again opposed by Tammany (1892), 328.
 Clinton, De Witt, quarrel with Tammany, 20; Mayor, 21; removed, 35; again Mayor, 35; hold on lower classes, 36; defeated for President, 39; removed, 46; vote of thanks to, 47; Erie Canal project, 48; Governor, 55; re-elected, 66; opposes constitutional convention bill, 69; removed as Canal Commissioner, 77; re-elected Governor, 80; death of, 89.
 Clinton, George, 2, 20, 21.
 Cochrane, John, 198, 204, 225.
 Cockran, W. Bourke, 319, 326.
 Coddington, Jonathan I., 159.
 Colden, Cadwallader D., 10; Mayor, 53; reappointed, 64; removed, 71.
 Coler, Bird S., 342.
 Committee of Seventy (of 1871), 286, etc.; victorious, 292, 303-4; (of 1894) 333.
 Common Council, Federalist members secede, 19; power and forms of, 45, 49; spoils system of, 53; method of covering extravagance, 53; report of, 64; arbitrary powers of, 82, 90; two branches, 92; fraudulent election in, 96; prodigality of, 101; corruption of, 122; deadlock in, 124; Whig control of, 181; Tammany controls, 142; "Forty Thieves," 184; appalling corruption, 199; Tammany rules, 215; frauds, 216; greater corruption, 236-39, 245; legislated out of office and new Council, 271; low character of members, 307-8; changes in, 307; "boodle" Aldermen of 1894, 314; much of former power restored, 315-17.
 Conkling, Frederick A., defeated for Mayor, 261.
 Conner, William C., 229.
 Connolly, Richard B., 145, 181, 196, 242, 256, 258, 264, 268, 271, 277, 282, 287; flight and death, 296.
 Constitution, State (of 1777), 3; (of 1821-22) 82; (of 1874) 315-17.
 Convention, Baltimore (of 1846), 163; (of 1852) 186; Syracuse, State (of 1860), 240; Chicago (of 1864), 246; New York (of 1868), 258; St. Louis (of 1876), 310; Chicago (of 1894), 314; St. Louis (of 1898), 324.
 Coogan, James J., 323.
 Cooper, Edward, 220; Mayor, 310, 312.
 Cornell, Alonso B., Governor, 311-13.
 Cornell, William H., 198.
 Coulter, James E., 198.
 Council of Appointment, powers of, 21, 35; abolished, 70.
 Council of Revision, abolished, 70.
 County Democracy, formation of, 312; "regular," 313, 314; out of existence, 323.
 Crawford, William H., 72, 74, etc.
 Croker, Richard, Alderman, 270; denounced, 305; Mr. McCann's

- testimony, 315; succeeds Kelly as "boss," 319; life of, 320-21; his political adroitness, 322; testimony before Fassett Committee, 327; sudden acquirement of wealth, 334-36; selects officials, 339; testimony before Maset Committee, 341-44.
- Cutting, Francis B., 174.
- Daly, Joseph, F., 340.
- Darling, William A., 249.
- Davis, Judge Noah, 293.
- Davis, Mathew L., 14, 18; charged with smuggling, 29; Grand Sachem, etc., 30; 40, 54, 83; trial of, 84.
- Debt, City, 60, 141, 184, 236, etc.
- Delavan, Daniel E., 181.
- Democratic party, 100, 108, 104, etc.
- Devlin, Charles, 217.
- Devlin, John E., 244.
- Dix, John A., defeated for Mayor, 310.
- Dowd, William, 312.
- Downes, Samuel, 236.
- Drake, Ellis G., 167.
- Duryea, Stephen C., 181.
- Edson, Franklin, Mayor, 314; vetoes corrupt resolution, 316, 320.
- Edwards, Ogden, 105.
- Ellis, William A., 329.
- Ely, Smith, Jr., 249; Mayor, 310.
- Emmott, Judge, 290.
- Empire Club, 161.
- Equal Rights movement, origin, 110; secedes from Tammany, 120, 128, 129; leaders persecuted, 130; fusion with Tammany, 184; 151.
- Erhardt, Joel B., defeated for Mayor, 323.
- Erie Canal, agitation for, 48; popularity of project, 54; opposition of Tammany, 58; bill a law, 54; benefits of, 80.
- "Fassett Committee" (Senate Committee on Cities, investigation of, 1890), 315, 320, 325.
- Federalist party, 17, 35; disorganized, 41; 49, 53, etc.
- Fellows, Col. John R., 317.
- Ferguson, John, Mayor, 46.
- Fisk, James, Jr., 266, 267, 275.
- Flack, James A., 324.
- Flagg, A. C., 216.
- Foley, John, 277, 289.
- Fowler, Isaac V., 174, 196, 197, 219, 227, 229; embezzlement and flight, 232-3; 301.
- Fowler, John Walker, 233.
- Franchisees, public, 92, 116; corrupt grants of, 198, 199, 239, 248, 315-16.
- Franklin, Morris, 159.
- Frauds, election, 87, 90, 107, 108, 139, 140, 161, 184, 215, 228, 234, 243, 250, 260, 261, 263, 292, 323, 329-30.
- Free Soilers, 191.
- Gansevoort Market scandal, 201.
- Gardiner, Asa Bird, 345.
- Garvey, Andrew J., 253, 264, 296.
- General Committee (of Tammany Hall), origin, 24; powers of, etc., 42; 85, 95, 97, 100, 121, 125; membership increased, 132; further enlarged, 158; 163; two committees, 173; riot, 191-98; factional struggle, 209-10; another schism, 219; repudiates Wood, 223; again enlarged, 302; Tweed's creatures in, 310; present character and powers of, 347.
- Genet, Henry W., 269, 291.
- George, Henry, for Mayor, 322; defeated, 323; for Mayor, and death of, 337.
- George, Henry, Jr., 337-8.
- Gibbs, Frederick S., 314.
- Gilbert, Garrit, 122.
- Gilroy, Thomas F., 319; Mayor, 323.
- Goff, John W., 330.
- Good Government Clubs, 333.
- Gould, Jay, 266, 267.

- Grace, William R., Mayor, 312;
again Mayor, 314.
- Grant, Gen. Ulysses S., 260, 306.
- Grant, Hugh J., defeated for Mayor,
314; testimony touching, 315, 316,
319, 321; Mayor, 323, etc.; testimony before "Fassett Committee" relating to, 325; defeated for Mayor, 333.
- Greely, Horace, 136, 138; for President and carries the city, 304.
- Green, Andrew H., 238, 292, 297.
- Gumbleton, Henry A., 311.
- Gunther, C. Godfrey, 240; Mayor,
246; defeated, 249.
- Hackett, John K., 244.
- Hackley, Andrew J., 236-7.
- Haff, John P., 15, 61, 62, 71.
- Hall, A. Oakey, 258; Mayor, 261;
re-elected, 267-8; 271; re-elected 275; 285, 286, 287, 288; indictment and trial, 289.
- Hallett, William Paxen, 112, 147.
- Hamilton, Alexander, 2, 22.
- Hancock, Gen. Winfield S., 311.
- "Hardshell"-"Softshell," struggle, 191, etc.; reunited, 211.
- Harper, James, Mayor, 160; defeated, 164.
- Hart, Emanuel B., 167, 220.
- Havemeyer, William F., Mayor, 163,
167; again Mayor, 168; 170, 180,
230, 283, 286; Mayor a third time, 304; good record of, 304-5; charges of, against John Kelly, 305-6; sudden death, 306.
- Hecker, John, 249.
- Herrick, John J., 207.
- Hewitt, Abram S., 312; Mayor, 323;
defeated, 323; 327.
- Hone, Philip, Mayor, 82.
- Hoyt, Jesse, 126, 146.
- Hubbard, Ruggles, 61, 71.
- "Huckleberry Franchise," 335.
- Humbert, Jonas, 28, 71.
- Ice Trust scandal, 341-2.
- Immigration, enormous increase of, 183.
- Imprisonment for debt, 111-12.
- Ingersoll, James H., 256, 264, 285.
- Irving Hall Democracy, 309, 312, 318;
out of existence, 328.
- Irving, "Jimmy," 277, 291.
- Jackson, Andrew, 5, 68, 72, 73, 74, 83, 100, 103, 105, 107, etc.
- Jacques, Moses, 111, 126, 130; for Mayor, 131.
- Jefferson, Thomas, 4, 5, 11, 17, 18, etc.
"Jeffersonian Democrats," 337.
- Judah, Naphthali, 62.
- Judiciary, held in contempt, 217-18; corruption of, 250, 262; assessments from candidates for, 343.
- Kelly, John, 211, 257, 261; leader of Tammany, 299; early life of, 300-1; charges against, 301, 305-6; shrewdness of, 303; absolute
"boss," 308; Controller, 310; quarrel with Gov. Robinson and candidate for Governor, 310-11; was refused a reappointment, 311;
death of, 317.
- Kennedy, William D., 234.
- Keyser & Co., 264.
- Kingsland, Ambrose C., Mayor, 180, 199.
- Knights of Labor, 321.
- "Know-Nothing party," 207, etc.
(see also Native American party).
- Land, sale of city, 53, 81.
- Lawrence, Abraham R., 303, 304.
- Lawrence, Cornelius W., Mayor, 109;
re-elected, 120, 127.
- Ledwith, Thomas A., 274-5.
- Lee, Gideon, Mayor, 120.
- Leggett, William, 118, 119; death of, 144; 146.
- "Lexow Disclosures," 330-32.
- Libby, James S., 211, 213, 214.
- Liberal Republican party, 303.

- "Liberty Boys," 303.
 Livingston, Edward, 11; Mayor, 19.
 "Locofocos," 121, 128.
 Loew, Charles E., 248.
 Lotteries, 62.
 Low, Seth, 338.
 Lowber, Robert W., 216-17.
 Lowndes, Oliver M., implicated, 143,
- McCann, Patrick H., testimony of, 315, 316, etc.
 McClellan, George B., 246-7.
 "McKeon Democracy," 246.
 McKeon, John, 167, 180, 220.
 McQuade, John, 338.
 Madison, James, 5.
 Manhattan Bank, 16, 21; scandals of, 149.
 Martling's (the first Wigwam), 13.
 Masonic Hall, 261.
 Mayor, early powers of, 47; elected by fraud, 96; chosen by people, 108; almost dictatorial power, 337.
 "Maset Investigation," 340-44.
 Mechanics' Lien Law, 95.
 Merritt, Henry W., trial of, 148.
 Mickle, Andrew H., Mayor, 164-5, 174, 180.
 Ming, Alexander, Jr., 134.
 Monopolies, Charter, number of, 92.
 Monroe, James, 5, 48, 99.
 Mooney, William, founds Tammany Society, 1; tool of Burr, 14; removed for malfeasance, 29, 30; resigns as Grand Sachem, 41; grandiloquent letter, 63; death, 102.
 Morgan, Edwin D., 260.
 Morris, Robert, record, 150; Mayor and re-elected, 154, 155, 156; re-elected, 156, 159.
 Morrissey, John, 269, 299, 301, 305.
 Morse, Samuel F. B., 154.
 Mozart Hall, 227; favors union, 234, 235; extinct, 262.
- Municipal Taxpayers' Association, 303.
 Nast, Thomas, 235.
 National Republican party, 98, 101, 107.
 Native American party, 121, 128, 153; subsidies, 168; 213, 224.
 Naturalisation frauds, 152, 224, 250-51.
 New York City Council of Political Reform, 283.
 Noah, M. M., 54, 71, 72, 73, 89, 95, 104, 105, 145, 174.
 Nominations, open sale of, 182.
 O'Brien, James, 269, 284, 304, 320.
 O'Connor, Charles, 174, 289, 302.
 O'Rourke, Matthew J., 284, 297.
 Ogden, Henry, 145.
 Opdyke, George P., 201, 230; Mayor, 241.
 Ottendorfer, Oswald, 307.
 Owen, Robert Dale, 93.
- Page, Samuel L., 28.
 Parkhurst, Rev. Charles H., 333.
 Paulding, William, Jr., Mayor, 57, 71, 82.
 Peckham, Wheeler H., 290.
 People's Municipal League (of 1890), 327.
 Phoenix, J. Phillips, 152, 154.
 Pierrepont, Judge Edwards, 286.
 Platt, Thomas C., 344.
 Polk, James K., 162, 167.
 Potter, Bishop Henry C., 345.
 Price, William M., 147.
 Purdy, Elijah F., 126, 144, 167, 174, 181, 193, 199, 220, 229, 235.
 Purser, George H., 246.
- Quincy, Josiah, 214.
 Radcliff, Jacob, Mayor, 35, 43, 46; removed, 57.
 Reform Movement (of 1870), 274-75.
 Registry Act, opposition to, 143, 144;

- repealed, 162; new act, 228-9; repealed, 278.
- "Regularity" of nominations, power of, 51, 72, 73, 74, 100, 178.
- "Representative Democracy," 243.
- Republican party (of 1797-1820), 17, 18, 35, 59 (see Democratic party).
- Republican Party (of 1854), 224, 252, etc.; leaders of, in Tweed's pay, 230, etc.
- Riker, Richard, 18, 43.
- "Ring," Tweed, rise of, 252; downfall of, 263; amount of thefts, 297-8.
- Riots, 109, 130, 145, 155, 214, 217, 221, 223.
- Roberts, Marshall O., 249, 277.
- Robinson, Lucius, 311.
- Romaine, Benjamin, 15, 26, 27, 29, 41, 72, 86.
- Romaine, Samuel B., 91.
- Roosevelt, James J., 112, 233.
- Roosevelt, Robert B., 286.
- Roosevelt, Theodore, defeated for Mayor, 323; Police Commissioner, 334; Governor, 342, 345.
- Rynders, Isaiah, 161, 186, 233.
- Saloons, dominance of, 212.
- Schell, Augustus, 207, 302.
- Scott, Francis M., 327.
- Selden, Dudley, 106, 164.
- Seymour, Horatio, 176, 180, 244, 253, 260, 302.
- Sharp, Jacob, 199, 200.
- Sharpe, Peter, 91, 105.
- Sheehan, John C., 332, 335, 336, 337.
- Shepard, Lorenzo B., 167.
- Sickles, Daniel E., 171, 187.
- Single Taxers, 321.
- Skidmore, William E., 134.
- Slamm, Levi D., 111, 130.
- Slavery, Tammany a firm supporter of, 169, etc.
- Small, Wilson, 219.
- Smith, Issac L., 126.
- Smith, Robert, 153.
- Socialists, 321.
- "Softshell" - "Hardshell," contest, 191, etc.; reunited, 211.
- Stagg, Abraham, 28, 30, 91.
- Strong, William L., Mayor, 333-34.
- Suffrage, manhood, opposition to, 67; agitation for, 68, 69; obtained, 70.
- Supervisors, Board of, 228, 229, 253; "Ring" of, 254-56.
- Swartwout, John, 15, 21, 22, 23, 53.
- Swartwout, Robert, 15, 19, 75, 114, 140.
- Swartwout, Samuel, 90, 99, 122, 126, 145-6.
- Tammany Hall, in the war of 1812, 39; changes in organisation, 42; rules city and State, 44; Irish mob it, 55; composition of rulers, 31; forced to advocate manhood suffrage, 67-68; struggles to control, 72, 77; some leaders indicted, 84; character of leaders, 91; great prestige of, 102; venality of leaders, 104-5; fusion with Equal Rights men, 134; its charities, 139; hold on the national party, 153; "gangs" in, 153; turbulence in, 163; spoils system of, 164; supports slavery, 169; factional fights in, 178; affray in, 167; contest in, 211; row in, 226; another row, 242; denounces Lincoln, 246; new Wigwam built, 257; enormous election frauds of, 260; effective organisation of, 272-3; reorganisation of, 302; victorious, 306-7; fight of against State Democrats, 310-11; "irregular," 313; in full power, 328; election frauds of, 329; henchmen sent to prison, 330; overthrown, 333; restored to power, 338; present character of its organization, 347.
- Tammany Society, foundation of, 1; contributory causes, 1-5; officers and ceremonials, 5-6; initial campaign of, 17; charter of, 23;

- apparent separation of society and political organization, 23-5; opposition to allens, 86; new Wigwam, 87; favors War of 1812 and drops Indian ceremonies, 41; excludes Adams men, 88; address of, 91; denounced, 123; excludes factions, 135; Polk a member, 167; contest at election of, 174; shuts out factions, 175; celebration, 181; factional contest in, 193-97; denounced, 205; dominates general committee, 219-20; factional struggle in, 226-23; Tweed absolutely controls, 272; celebration of, 274; reformers chosen Sachems, 302; Kelly's absolute control, 313.
- Tariff, protective, Tammany, advocates, 59.
- Thompson, Jonathan, 150.
- Tiemann, Daniel F., 216, 217; Mayor 225; 230.
- Tilden, Samuel J., 166, 220, 272, 290; Governor, 307; quarrel with Kelly and nominated for President, 310.
- Tompkins, Daniel D., 18; Governor, 46; Vice-President, 54; charged with being a defaulter, 65; defeated, 66; 114.
- Tracy, Benjamin F., 337.
- Trade-Unions, strikes of, 185; 199.
- Tucker, Gideon J., 233.
- Tweed, William M., 185, 229, 251, 252; career of, 253, etc.; in State Senate, 263, etc.; "Young Democracy" opposes, 269; but defeated, 271; statue to, proposed, 279-80; prodigality of, 281, 282; 285, 290, 291; re-elected Senator, 292; arrest, flight, imprisonment, recapture, 292, etc.; death, 295.
- Waring, Col. George E., Jr., 334.
- Washington, George, 5, 7.
- Waldron, William J., 114.
- Wales, Salem H., 307.
- Walsh, "Mike," 154, 171, 186, 300.
- Warner, Cornelius, 23.
- Waterbury, Nelson J., 196, 237, 253, 255.
- Watson, James, 264, 283-4.
- Webb, James Watson, 103, 104, 105.
- Weed, Thurlow, 115.
- Western, Henry M., 173, 190.
- Westervelt, Jacob A., Mayor, 189-90.
- Whig party, 97, 107, 108, 119, 123, 129, 134; local power, 138; 213, 252.
- Wickham, William H., Mayor, 307.
- Willett, Marinus, 7, 86.
- Winans, Orange S., 277.
- Wood, Fernando, 145, 173, 176, 178; indicted, 180; 196; first administration, 207, etc.; renominated, 210; 212, 213; re-elected, 214; 215, 216, 218, 219; turned out of Tammany Hall, 220; 222; again nominated, 223; defeated, 225; 227; re-elected, 230; 234, 236, 237, 238; defeated, 240; 243; Congressman, 244; defeated for Mayor, 249; 262, 263.
- Woodford, Stewart L., 275.
- Woodhull, Caleb S., Mayor, 171.
- Workingmen, combinations of, illegal, 122; great meeting of, 124.
- Workingmen's party, 93-9, 100, 106.
- Wortman, Teunis, 19, 30, 33, 43, 62, 71.
- Ulahoeffer, Michael, 91, 255.
- United Labor party, 322; dwindles away, 323.
- Valentine, Abraham M., 37.
- Van Buren, Martin, 15, 85, 103, 104, 123, 132, 153, 169.
- Van Ness, John P., 15, 75.
- Van Ness, William P., 15, 13, 22, 77-8.
- Van Schaick, Myndert, 170, 199.
- Van Wyck, Robert C., Mayor, 338; connection with Ice Trust, 341, 346.
- Varian, Isaac L., 121; Mayor, 125; 139; again Mayor, 142; 146; re-elected, 152.
- Verplanck, Gullian C., 105, 106, 109.
- Viaduct Railroad "Job," 276.
- "Young Democracy," 269, 270, 271, 273.

